FOR CENTURIES AND CENTURIES, cooking rice has been a long, long job. Boiling, washing, rinsing, draining, steaming . . . the process has been just about the same on the latest streamlined ranges as over an open fire in a primitive village.

“READER’S DIGEST” REPORTS EXCITING RICE DISCOVERY!

Famous magazine tells how new miracle-fast product revolutionizes rice cookery—cuts out washing, rinsing, draining, steaming—makes quick, quick glamour meals

This month, Reader’s Digest is telling millions of people the inside story of a brand-new kind of pre-cooked, quick-quick rice.

It’s Minute Rice, the fabulous cooking short cut that’s so much faster than old-time rice. A boon to busy homemakers, it saves countless kitchen hours, makes meal-planning infinitely easier and more varied. In a few minutes it’s ready to serve—snow-white, fluffy, perfect every time.

Served as a vegetable, Minute Rice is quicker than potatoes. It’s a marvelous leftover-brightener and meat-stretcher. It’s the beginning of lots of wonderful desserts. And, because it picks up all the taste and color of companion ingredients, it lends itself to hundreds of surprising flavor tricks that no other rice can boast.

Buy a box—try this miracle-rice reported in Reader’s Digest. You’ll find that, for glamour meals in a hurry, you just can’t beat Minute Rice!

For tastier, quick-quick meals

MINUTE BRAND RICE

Product of General Foods

EXCITEMENT HITS KITCHEN AFTER KITCHEN as Reader’s Digest reports to its millions of readers that rice need no longer be washed as the lady above is doing. Nor need it be rinsed, drained or steamed. New Minute Rice is pre-cooked, (just bring to a boil). This revolutionary food is so simple to prepare that even if you have never touched a saucepan before, you can now turn out snow-white, perfect rice in a hurry.

HEARTY MAN-SIZE MEAL...IN 15 MINUTES. Here’s a delicious dish that would take twice the time and three times the effort with old-time rice. To see how quick and easy it is with amazing Minute Rice, just start a pre-cooked ham steak frying; dump Minute Rice into water, bring to a boil and remove from heat. While it sits 10 minutes, cook quick-frozen peas . . . and presto! An appetizing, perfect meal.

BUSY-DAY LUNCH...IN 16 MINUTES. Tomato Rice is a rosy, appetizing dish for 4 . . . on the table in jig-time. Sauté $\frac{1}{4}$ cup finely diced onion in 2 tablespoons butter. Add $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups Minute Rice, 2 cups seasoned tomato juice, $\frac{1}{2}$ teaspoon salt, dash pepper, $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon sugar. Bring to full boil, remove from heat, cover, let stand 10 minutes. Serve with crisp bacon. You’ll taste a new kind of lusciousness—for Minute Rice absorbs all the tomato flavor and color—something no other rice can do.

REDDI-WIP BRINGS NEW GLAMOUR TO THIS YEAR'S HOLIDAY DESSERTS

Saves Time — Wins Wives Coast to Coast

FAMILY OF 31 GLORIFIES OWN DESSERTS WITH ONE CAN OF REDDI-WIP. All of the 31 people pictured here are having their desserts glamorized with a single can of Reddi-wip. Millions of smart housewives will take this cue—put the can of Reddi-wip right on the table at family dinners during the coming holidays—give everyone the fun of decorating his own dessert. Housewives, like Huckleberry Finn, save work, guests get big extra thrill.

REDDI-WIP ADDS FESTIVE TOUCH TO ALL DESSERTS

Every typical American holiday dessert is made more delicious, more enticing with Reddi-wip. Traditional plum pudding, steamed puddings, fruit salads, pumpkin and mince pies rise to glory when each individual serving is finished off with a sparkling mound of luscious Reddi-wip. And left-overs are easily turned into tempting desserts for follow-up meals.

MADE WITH FRESH, RICH CREAM—IT "WHIPS ITSELF" AT THE TOUCH OF A FINGER. No beaters or bowls to wash—no last-minute failures. You just take the can of Reddi-wip out of the refrigerator when you are ready to decorate desserts or salads. Right now is a good time to order Reddi-wip from your milkman or grocer so that you will be sure to have it for all of your holiday needs—but insist on genuine Reddi-wip. Don't be satisfied with an imitation. Then you know you'll be getting pure, fresh dairy cream, processed the special Reddi-wip way.

Meet a few owners of the STEEL INDUSTRY

A half million people like these own the 247 companies that make up the steel industry in America. Their savings helped provide jobs for the more than one-half million steelworkers. On the average each stockholder owns fewer than 75 shares. Many of them own fewer than 10 shares. Read how these steel stockholders have faith in the future of the steel industry and of our American system.

FRED E. JANSEN, insurance salesman of Freeport, Long Island, N. Y. declares . . . "Steel is essential business. It is the very foundation of our country."

CHARLES P. OLIVIER, Upper Darby, Pa., Professor at the Univ. of Pennsylvania, feels that . . . "I own stock in one of America's steel companies and my investment should be protected, as I worked hard to make this money."

BERTHA H. SCHEFFLER, Rutland, Vermont, former 1st Lt., W.A.C. says . . . "While in Service I invested in steel stocks. This enabled me to open up my own Women's Exchange Shop."

WALTER F. AUCH, civil engineer of Easton, Pa. writes . . . "To me this means aiding a basic industry, advancing the welfare and progress of our country."

GEORGE W. HAGEDORN, 1506 Grand Ave., Asbury Park, New Jersey, who is retired, states . . . "Cast your bread upon the sea of steel and it comes back."

ARTHUR A. CARR, Ticonderoga, N. Y., farmer, says . . . "I own steel stock and this means that my small savings from agriculture are used as capital in another industry basic to our economy."

Steel company stockholders have had steady returns in the past few years. But dividends have not been large because of the need to use earnings for new plants and improvements. Expansion in the industry has kept pace with the growth of the country.

Today, with less than 7 per cent of the world's population, our country has 53 per cent of the world's steel producing capacity. Stockholders have helped create this industry and this is the way in which our American system works for the benefit of all.

Serve Borden's Instant coffee -It's always "Flavor-Peak" perfect!

Now richer, heartier, even more flavorful than ever, because it's made by the "Flavor-Peak" process. Only Borden's has this great new process, which extracts much more flavor from the freshly roasted coffee. It's all coffee, too... 100% pure coffee, nothing added. And so easy! No pots to wash, no messy grounds (Borden's throws the used grounds away)! Borden's is always the perfect ending for a perfect meal!

Here's the world's gayest HOLIDAY CAKE!

It's "Christmas Snow Cake" and so easy. Just make two 8-inch layers of supreme white cake by simply adding liquid to that marvelous new Swans Down Instant Cake Mix.* When the layers are cool, cover with this magic icing:

RECIPE FOR MAGIC FROSTING.

Cream 3 tablespoons butter. Gradually cream in ¼ cup of BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND SWEETENED CONDENSED MILK. Add 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind, mixing well. Gradually add 2½ cups sifted confectioners' sugar and ¼ cup EAGLE BRAND alternately. Beat until smooth and light. Add coloring, if desired. Spread between layers, on top, sides of cake. Sprinkle with 1 cup Baker's Shredded Coconut.* (*Products of General Foods.)

FREE! "Eagle Brand Magic Recipes." Send a post card to Elsie, Dept. L-129, P.O. Box 175, New York 46, N.Y.

Borden's None Such Mince Meat makes pie taste like Christmas

None Such is the real old-fashioned kind of mince meat, made with sunny fruits and exciting spices, flavor-aged the old New England way. Get it in ready-to-use or condensed form. If it isn't the best mince meat you ever tasted —your money back! Just send the label from the jar or the front of the package to Elsie, Dept. LM-129, 350 Madison Ave., N.Y. 17, N.Y.

Use Borden's Instant Mix to make grand "Hot Chocolate" right in the cup!

Just measure Borden's Instant Mix into the cup, add hot milk or hot water. No sugar needed, no paste to make, no cooking, no pot to wash. Wonderfully nourishing—Vitamins B₁ and D, and Iron added!...P-s-s-t—whipped cream and a sprinkling of chipped chocolate make it a gay holiday-party treat!

LIFE'S REPORTS

SERGEANT ROSS STOOD EASY WHEN HE WAS REPORTING TO HIS BOSS

"YOU'LL NEVER GET RICH," BUT HE DID

by MARION HARGROVE

Author of "See Here, Private Hargrove"

To all appearances Sgt. 1st Class John Ross is the typical old Army man. His face is broad and rather leathery, his eyes a trifle shrewd. His belt hangs contentedly across his solid front at a point arbitrarily chosen to represent a waistline. His uniform has the peculiar old Army look, as if the wearer had been fitted to the uniform rather than the uniform to the wearer. And he has about him that air of solidity and well-being that comes of long years in the service.

But Johnnie Ross, except for his appearance, is by no means a typical old soldier. He is not allergic to work and he has not acquired the sour temper that characterizes many an Old Sarge. A further distinction is that he has demolished the myth best expressed in the old song, "You'll never get rich, you —, you're in the Army now."

Sergeant Ross retired late last month at half pay after 22 years of service to devote himself exclusively to his sporting, agricultural and business interests. At the age of 44, still in good health and spirits, he can look back on one good life and begin another. His wife is still young and pretty, his six children have turned out remarkably well and he himself is a pillar of his community. His material blessings include his farm, a fine pack of foxhounds, a filling station which he built himself and which does a daily business ranging from $45 to $110, and the rents from three nearby houses and a store.

Ross says without blushing that he made all his acquisitions honestly and without neglecting his military duties. This appears to be so. He lays his success in life to thrift, good management and running an occasional crap game for the officers.

Ross succumbed to a recruiting sergeant's spiel in Meridian, Miss. in 1927. He was sent to Fort Bragg, N.C., where he found himself in the old 5th Field Artillery, learning the squads-right drill and the names of all his army superiors from his first sergeant to Calvin Coolidge. Within a few months he acquired a first-class gunner's rating that added $5 a month to his pay. Then he went to work after hours in the barber-and-tailor shop, for which he got another $10 a month and free pressing for all his uniforms.

A private's pay at that time was $21, minus $1.75 for laundry. Most soldiers were always broke except for a few fleeting moments on payday. The 7th of the month was "canteen check day," when a private could draw credit for $5 at the post exchange, $2 at the barber's and $1.40 (10 tickets) at the theater. Most men drew their limit, sold the checks at cut rates or used them in the day's big poker game. Ross found that he could buy a $5 canteen book from somebody for $3 cash and save 40% on such PX items as gasoline, tires and shoes. In no time at all he was lending money to master sergeants.

By the end of Ross's first year in the Army he had become chief projectionist at the post theater, risen to the high rank of private first class, married a nice Fayetteville girl named Mary Bolton and settled down.

The pertinent question—how a man in such a ridiculously low-income bracket could hope to keep a wife and family—has occurred to many people, among them a battery commander to whom Ross once applied for permission to turn in his last year's Chevrolet and get the new model.
Ross's pay as a pfc. was $30 a month and his rations allowance $12 to $14. His rent was $20 a month, his food bill, even at the low commissary prices, was $35 and (disregarding his other expenses) the payments on his car were $36. "Well," said the captain, "if Al Capone can have a car, I suppose you can too." One reason Ross could make ends meet was that Mary made all her own and the children's clothes, but the chief reason was that Ross himself was gifted with a magnetic attraction for every stray dollar in his vicinity.

In addition to his pay Ross usually drew $18 a month at the theater, plus an average of $10 a month for setting up the ring for boxing matches, plus $5 from each of the road shows that played Bragg every month or so. He not only played in the barracks poker games, but he sold peanuts and his wife's sandwiches at them. He had a troop of small boys hawking these wares all over the post.
He carried candy on marches and retailed it to his hiking comrades at a profit of 40¢ a box. He sometimes rented out his car at $5 a night or took parties to Wilmington and Charlotte and Raleigh at $5 per round trip per man.

The card games which he conducted for the battery, the officers' clubs and the American Legion occurred several nights a week, lasting as far into the night as Ross could manage to keep awake. Ross usually got 80% or 90% of the house's take and usually played in the games himself.
Sometimes he lost money, sometimes he broke even and sometimes he took in as much as $600 a month. His highest earnings came in 1940 and '41, when the Army began expanding, but then he gave up gambling almost altogether because, he says, he "just couldn't go on taking money away from boys."

The Army's expansion in the two years before Pearl Harbor did not at first work out too well for Ross. He had been private first class, with a second-class specialist rating and the extra pay that went along with it. Suddenly he was "promoted" to sergeant, without the specialist rating.
This added two more stripes to his uniform and subtracted $12

from his pay. He was still brooding about this when Congress instituted family allotments. The Army was to dock each married soldier's pay $22 a month, giving him in return $50 for the support of his wife, $30 for his first child and $20 each for the others.

The Rosses, blessed with six children, put the extra money to good use. The family bank account went into a down payment on the purchase of their home, three neighboring houses and a store building. Since then the allotment checks have paid for all this real estate, $2,000 worth of improvements for the Ross home and an extra 9½ acres of surrounding land.

Another considerable factor in the Ross economic scheme is a venerable military custom known as chiseling. Its practitioners declare that this consists merely of moving things from one place to another, without really taking them away from the Army. For example an Army post always has plenty of garbage, and hogs eat garbage, so Ross began raising hogs in 1937. At one time he had as many as 100 little porcine mouths to feed.

A great student and admirer of the Ross technique was his boss, Major B. R. Ulmer. Ulmer and the sergeant, who are about the same age, have been cronies at hunting for possibly 15 years: swapping hounds, disparaging and hoodwinking each other and going off together on trips where they often shared the same bed for a week at a time. Ulmer was constantly awed by Ross's quietly spectacular powers of persuasion, to which he frequently fell victim himself. Last spring, when Ross was building his gas station, Ulmer gave him a caustic dressing-down for having engineered two connecting three-day passes, then sat there dazed while Ross talked him into giving him an additional 10-day furlough.

"He talked so pitiful," the major says, "you'd have thought he was sick. Said he was going out of his mind getting that place built, and the civilians never did one thing right unless he was there to show them how, so I gave him the furlough. Civilians! The only civilians on that project were his boy Jimmy and that colored boy that works for him!"

Once when Ross, who has been accused of burying his money, applied to his battery commander for a seven-day furlough, the captain asked him what he wanted it for. "I'd like to spade up my money and turn it over," Ross told him. "It's getting moldy on one side." The captain was delighted by the explanation. "Take 10 days," he said, "and do the job right."

In the community to which Ross is retiring, a mile or so from Fayetteville on the Murchison Road, he is respected as a hard worker and an upright man. He and Mrs. Ross are known for their easygoing ways and their unflagging devotion to their children: Clara and Geraldine, who married ex-GIs and moved to Kentucky and Utah; Jimmy, who runs the gas station; Joyce, a pretty blond senior at Fayetteville High; Billy, who likes to draw and plays on the Legion baseball team; and Mickey, the 9-year-old family mascot, who collects red ants in fruit jars for purposes of study. Neither Ross nor his wife worries much about the danger of his having too much time on his hands in retirement. He has already cleared 12½ acres behind the house for truck farming and another 10 acres are on the agenda. Eight more are being considered for a swimming pool and fishpond.

There is no indication that the new civilian will differ greatly from the old sergeant. As he sits on his front porch, gazing off at his gas station and the empty lot across from it, a look of dreamy speculation comes into his eyes. "You know," he says, "if I was to buy my gasoline by the tank-carload, I could probably save considerable money that way."

AT HOME the busy sergeant is welcomed solicitously by his wife Mary.

President Truman waves merrily to pregame paraders, grits his teeth against the intense cold, revives to cheer.

General Omar Bradley seems speculative, somber, eventually registers a smile as Army scores again.

ANNAPOLIS SUPERINTENDENT

WESTERN UNION DEFENSE CHIEF

A WEST POINT CADET

Rear Admiral James Holloway worries, is appalled, and roars loud approval of a jarring Navy tackle.

Viscount Montgomery applauds politely, looks puzzled, finally joins the crowd in a wild burst of cheering.

Cadet Linwood Mather is first openmouthed with eagerness, then utterly disgusted, then really ecstatic.

When the Army and Navy football teams met Nov. 26 at Philadelphia, the 102,000 spectators gave almost all their attention to the activities on the playing field. This was unfortunate, for some of the day's best performances were contributed by the spectators themselves. Indeed, such onlookers as President Truman, Field Marshal the Viscount Montgomery and a cadet named Linwood Mather turned in star emotional performances that were too good to lose. To preserve these and others, LIFE stationed Photographer Ralph Morse on the Navy side of the stadium and Photographer H. G. Walker on the Army side (where the President sat). As Army surged to a 38-0 victory, in what is supposed to be the only area of interservice rivalry, there was joy in the Army stands and gloom on the Navy side. Oddly enough, however, it was President Truman and Montgomery—presumably neutral—who proved the greatest muggers of them all.

NOW! PROOF THAT BRUSHING TEETH RIGHT AFTER EATING WITH COLGATE DENTAL CREAM HELPS STOP TOOTH DECAY!

Exhaustive Research by Eminent Dental Authorities Proves How Using Colgate Dental Cream Helps Stop Tooth Decay Before it Starts!

NOW dental science offers proof that always brushing teeth with Colgate's right after eating helps stop tooth decay before it starts! Proof—based on hundreds of case histories, two years of continuous research at leading universities—the most conclusive proof in all dentifrice research on tooth decay.

Modern research shows tooth decay is caused by mouth acids which are at their worst right after eating. When you brush your teeth with Colgate Dental Cream as directed, you help remove acids before they can harm enamel. And Colgate's penetrating foam reaches crevices in teeth where food particles often lodge.

The Most Conclusive Proof
In All Dentifrice Research On Tooth Decay!

The Colgate's now at your dealer's is the same formula used in the tests. Colgate's contains all the necessary ingredients, including an exclusive patented ingredient, for effective daily dental care. No risk of irritation to tissues and gums! And no change in flavor, foam, or cleansing action.

No claim is made that using Colgate's can stop all tooth decay, or help cavities already started. But brushing teeth with Colgate Dental Cream as directed is a safe, proved way to help stop tooth decay!

X-RAYS SHOW HOW PROPER USE OF COLGATE'S HELPS STOP TOOTH DECAY!

Under the direction of eminent dental authorities, one group of college men and women always brushed their teeth with Colgate Dental Cream right after eating—while another group followed their usual dental care. The average of the group using Colgate's as directed was a startling reduction in number of cavities—far less tooth decay! The other group developed new cavities at a much higher rate.

All-I-I A-board for Christmas!

If wouldn't be Christmas for her folks down on the farm if they didn't see their grandchildren. Fortunately for her and her husband, Pullman makes traveling with children easy as tucking them in, turning out the lights, and waking up to an old-fashioned Christmas at home.

Christmas with her only daughter is 500 miles away—500 miles of ice, snow and mountains. But this charming lady isn't worried about the weather in her "weather-proof" Pullman Roomette. She's snug and secure and sure of getting there. She's traveling on dependable railroad schedules.

He's a business man whose principal business right now is to be home in time for last-minute Christmas shopping. Pullman will get him there, deliver him right to the heart of town, convenient to the shopping district. He's completely relaxed because he knows even in "bad" weather he's safer crossing the country by Pullman than he is crossing the street in traffic.

Each Christmas is precious. Cherish this Christmas by spending it with the ones you love. And by all means go Pullman to be sure of getting there in time. Better call your ticket agent now to reserve space.

FIVE GENERATIONS

Sirs:

In LIFE (Nov. 21) you offered congratulations to the five generations of the Basenberg family of Chicago. I am enclosing a snapshot to show we beat the Basenbergs' record by having both great-great-grandparents become such at earlier ages. Here we are three years ago (right to left): Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Poe, Brady, Texas, great-great-grandparents at 73; Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Bruce, Dreer, Texas, great-grandparents at 65 and 55; Mr. and Mrs. Jerry E. Coleman, Dreer, Texas, grandparents at 47 and 37; Mr. and Mrs. Hershall T. Dubree, parents at 29 and 21; and great-great-grandchild Thomas Adrian Dubree. Since this picture was taken, the great-great-grandfather has passed away.

MRS. HERSHALL T. DUBREE
Albuquerque, N. Mex.

● In addition to the Dubrees, 15 other five-generation families sent pictures or information about themselves to LIFE. To all of them LIFE offers its congratulations.—ED.

Sirs:

Why bother to congratulate a family of only five generations? Ours has six, as you can see from this photograph taken a few months ago. The

BETTY McDOWELL

PHONY DEER

Sirs:

Your story, "Phony Deer Fools Hunters" (LIFE, Nov. 21), shows that sportsmen are much the same all over the country. Our Minnesota sportsmen have bagged a 1930 Model "A" Ford with an Army blanket hung over the hood, several owls and a mailbox with luminous letters on it. But the prize should go to the sportsman who shot his own horse on his own property.

STERLING KRONE
Fergus Falls, Minn.

Sirs:

I indignantly arise to the defense of the Western hunter, being a converted Westerner myself. While having breakfast in a small Western cafe last August, I overheard an eastern "city hunter" describe his luck thusly: "Not much luck today, except a couple of sound shots." When asked what a "sound shot" was, our well-equipped hunter replied, "Oh, we heard some noises in the brush and let go a couple of rounds. No luck, though."

MAYA MURALS

Sirs:

In your story about the Maya murals (LIFE, Nov. 21), the scene showing the bleeding prisoners interests me. You state that the figure at lower left (partially destroyed) holds the hand of a captive he has just stabbed. He didn't stab him—he is in the process of pulling out his fingernails. If you examine the picture you'll see that the prisoners crouching just above and to the right of the corner figure are also bleeding from their finger tips.

PLUMMETING CAR

Sirs:

In LIFE (Nov. 21) a picture called "Nose Dive" appeared. Would you show me what that old car looked like after it hit the street?

AFTER NOSE DIVE

RUSSIAN METHOD

Sirs:

Your piece on the Russians changing the direction of rivers (LIFE, Nov. 21) reminds me of a story told me by my late uncle, Arthur Powell Davis, who went to Russia in 1929 as chief consulting engineer on waterpower and irrigation. Soon after he arrived in Russia he was told that it would be necessary to build a dam on a certain river at a certain place and it would be necessary to have it finished within the two years his contract was to run. My uncle made a survey of the site and determined that the dam could be built either by hand, requiring 10,000 men, or by machine (the only way to get the necessary machinery to the site was to float it there by boat during the spring floods). The latter course was chosen. During the interval before the floods they gathered up all the earth-moving equipment and loaded it on flatboats. During the flood they moved the boats up the river as far as possible toward the site. When the boatmen reached the head of navigation they unloaded the machines onto the river bank, where they promptly sank out of sight in the mud. That was the end of the machinery—also of the proposed dam.

LEANING ILGS

Sirs:

With reference to the photograph of Robert Ilg moving from the leaning tower in Ilgair Park, Chicago (LIFE, Nov. 21), the moving job presented an unusual problem for Joyce Brothers Storage and Van, agents of Allied Van Lines. The moving men were confronted with furniture which was propped up 7° to plumb so that the Ilg family could sit "level." The Ilgs lived in the tower from 1932 to 1945, and it was fully equipped with all household facilities. It was actually a water tower with tanks of 100,000 gallon capacity and had four carillon bells at the very top. The bells were cast in Italy in 1632 and brought here in 1935 with the permission of the Italian government. Mrs. Ilg said, "This wasn't originally built as a home, but he [Mr. Ilg, a retired official from the ventilating business] was so practical we moved in."

PHILIPPINE ELECTION

Sirs:

YOUR ARTICLE ON THE PHILIPPINE ELECTION (LIFE, Nov. 21) WAS BOTH INTERESTING AND ENLIGHTENING BUT YOU HAD ONE SMALL POINT A LITTLE JUMBLED. THAT IS WHERE YOU TELL OF THE MOUNTAIN-DWELLING IGOROTS EATING DOGS. THEIR INTENTIONS ARE NOT TO EAT THE DOGS THEMSELVES BUT TO CONTINUE STARVING THEM TILL THERE IS NOTHING LEFT IN THEIR STOMACHS. THEN THEY FEED THE DOG ALL THE RICE AND WATER HE CAN TAKE. AFTER AWHILE THEY KILL HIM AND FROM HIS STOMACH TAKE THE HALF-DIGESTED RICE. THAT IS THE TRUE DELICACY. . . .

AIR FORCE BIRTHPLACE

Sirs:

In your article, "Life Visits Some Famous Generals" (LIFE, Nov. 21), you state that San Antonio, Texas is the birthplace of the Air Force. During the past war, while stationed at Fort Monmouth, N. J. (U.S. Signal Corps), I was told that the U.S. Air Force was born there.

ARTHUR R. PASQUARELLA

Philadelphia, Pa.

Sirs:

... It is my recollection that after the preliminary flights at Fort Myer, Va. the activity—then known as Aviation Section of G. Company, Signal Corps—was transferred to College Park, Md. and that College Park is the accepted "birthplace" of what is now known as the Air Force. Later on a few men and a ship were sent to the old Remount Station, Fort Sam Houston.

STEPHEN F. TILLMAN

Washington, D. C.

● Reader Tillman is right. Although test flights were made in 1908 at Fort Myer by the Wright brothers, the establishment of the College Park flying school in 1909 is regarded by the Air Force as its birth date.—ED.

LIFE'S COVER

When Joan Appleton of Scarsdale, N.Y. came to New York City to shop she was spotted by LIFE Photographer Leonard McCombe as she got off a Fifth Avenue bus. McCombe was one of six LIFE photographers strolling the avenue to get a story on pretty girls in New York (pp. 71-76). He stopped Joan, photographed her and this week she appears on LIFE's cover. It was not the first time Joan's beauty had been singled out; in the 10th grade she was voted the prettiest girl in her class. Now, at 19—and even prettier—she is a Wellesley sophomore.

Who helped Tommy Thomas find the tangerines in his stocking?

You can trace that Christmas morning smile of Tommy's right back to the smile the citrus rancher had when he arranged a loan on the orchard where Tommy's tangerines came from.

Yes, it was The Prudential who made the loan that helped the rancher . . . and helped fill Tommy's stocking.

The Prudential is constantly helping American farmers and ranchers . . . making it possible for them to produce more of the products that make our lives richer and more healthful.

The money The Prudential lends every year to farmers throughout the United States and Canada (and to other thousands of homeowners and businessmen) comes from the premiums paid by Prudential policyholders . . . in order to guarantee a secure future for their families. And because of the interest earned on these investments, The Prudential is able to provide you with life insurance protection at a far lower cost than would otherwise be possible.

ON ELECTION DAY A COLOMBIAN MILITARY POLICEMAN SEARCHES VOTER'S HAT FOR CONCEALED WEAPONS. POLLS WERE CLOSELY GUARDED AND VOTING WAS QUIET

HOW TO WIN AN ELECTION IN COLOMBIA

For decades Colombia was one country in Latin America which never chose its governments with bullets instead of ballots. But by last week, in the election shown here, her liberty-loving people lost their precious heritage through a relentless power play by the minority Conservative party.

The Conservatives (who held the presidency although the Liberals had a majority in Congress) played rough from the beginning. They recalled strong man Laureano Gómez from voluntary exile in fascist Spain as their candidate. The main feature of his campaign was a reign of terror in the interior. Liberal towns were shot up. In the last two months 2,000 Liberals were killed, hundreds jailed and other hundreds fled their towns. Seven thousand Liberal families fled to Bogotá alone. There Conservative President Mariano Ospina Pérez declared a state of siege and exercised heavy-handed censorship. Troops took possession of the capital and patrolled the streets.

The ruthlessness of the Conservatives was almost matched by the bungling and indecision of the Liberals. Their leader, wealthy, scholarly Darío Echandía first got Congress to move up the date of the election from next spring to this fall. But when Gómez' tactics appeared to be successful the Liberals tried unsuccessfully to change the date back. Desperate, they declared the election would be a farce and withdrew from the contest. This gave those Liberals who might have dared to vote no one to vote for. Finally the Liberals called for a general strike, but Gómez put it down by sending troops to man transport and public utilities. In the end there was nothing for Echandía to do but protest futilely in the well-guarded streets—where his own brother was killed just before election day.

LAST CRY OF FREEDOM WAS BURIAL PROCESSION

BOGOTÁ, COLOMBIA

On the Friday before election day Darío Echandía set out with his two brothers and a small group of Liberal party leaders for a stroll. It had long been his pride that he could walk the streets of Bogotá without a bodyguard—something which Laureano Gómez dared not do. But this time he did not get far. At the Plaza San Martín near his home in the northern residential district the group was met by police. In these tense days riots started as quickly as the flaring of a match; by the time the firing had stopped two of the party faithful were dead; Darío Echandía himself was lucky, but his brother Vicente lay mortally wounded.

The next day nearly everyone expected trouble. But the word spread slowly and nothing happened until Sunday—the day of the election—when a large black flag was taken from the Liberal party's headquarters to Echandía's home. Only a few hundred marched behind the flag at first, but hundreds more joined along the way and further thousands swelled the crowd after attending funeral services in the neighboring church of Santa Teresita.

Thus began the strange death march to the cemetery, a weary two miles away. Well-dressed men walked side by side with Indians wearing sandals; society women marched along beside shopgirls and children. Students walked with fire in their eyes, flinging their arms up from time to time as they shouted "Viva!" or "Abajo!" ("Down!"). The cries of "Abajo Laureano!" rose in volume, and as the cortege moved on one little man with a black hat and a sad face kept repeating in a loud voice, but as if speaking only to himself, the one word abajo—not abajo this or that, but just the lone word, abajo.

By the time the cortege reached the cemetery, there were 25,000 marchers and the shouting could be heard for miles. Three truckloads of soldiers were waiting at the intersection there, but they stayed in their vehicles and the crowd surged around them. And then, apparently on the inspiration of the moment, everyone turned left, in the direction of the presidential palace, instead of right toward the cemetery gates. The casket containing the body of Darío Echandía's brother bobbed about on the crest of the crowd, and a great cry rose up, "A palacio!"

Three blocks up the street stood a line of soldiers with glinting bayonets and a row of tanks. This was the turning point of the whole tragic election period. At this moment the crowd might have gone on in an attempt to throw the Conservatives bodily out of the palace and out of power; civil war might have resulted. It did not. A few pistol shots sent the milling thousands into momentary panic. Then the shouting died suddenly. Shocked and angry, Darío Echandía came striding through the crowd demanding that his brother's body be brought back to the cemetery. At the same moment a rumor swept the mob like a swift flame: the government had resigned and the army was in power. All at once there was laughter and glad shouts and the casket was carried back down the street and into the cemetery grounds. Vicente Echandía, a farmer and the father of three children, was laid away in a martyr's tomb.

The crowd seemed to sense the finality of it all. One of the party leaders made a brief speech, scotching the rumor of the government's resignation but praising the army as the country's last hope of freedom. The crowd broke up, scuffling along streets littered with fragments of a funeral wreath. The little man with the black hat walked slowly away still repeating to himself the one word, "Abajo."

ened to storm the presidential palace. Now, elated by the swiftly spreading rumor that Conservative president had resigned and army taken power, they lay away the body of Vicente Echandía in circular crypt (left) amidst fervent singing of the national anthem and Churchillian V sign. The rumor was baseless; Gómez was installed in power.

NEWS IS PASSED by word of mouth in street groups. The people distrusted the severely censored newspapers.

RAILWAYS were run by soldiers who took over most of the transportation system during the abortive strike.

TROOPS were held alert day and night with bayoneted rifles, ready to move in wherever trouble might threaten.

STRONG MAN GOMEZ leaves Bogotá's Jockey Club after pre-election visit. He did not vote, remaining in his heavily guarded suburban home until the elections were over.

VOTES ARE COUNTED in a haphazard way at one polling place by tossing ballots into a hat. Since only Conservative party members voted, ballots were scarcely checked.

ONE VICTIM OF A PLANE CRASH

Joe Smith survived the fall of Bataan and left a son he never saw

When the American Airlines plane crashed at Dallas on Nov. 29, Joe Stanley Smith of Albuquerque was one of the 28 who were killed. Joe was 29 years of age, had dark hair, a bad stomach and false teeth. He was married and had three children, the youngest of whom he never saw—the child was born on Nov. 23, and Joe had been away on business since Nov. 18.

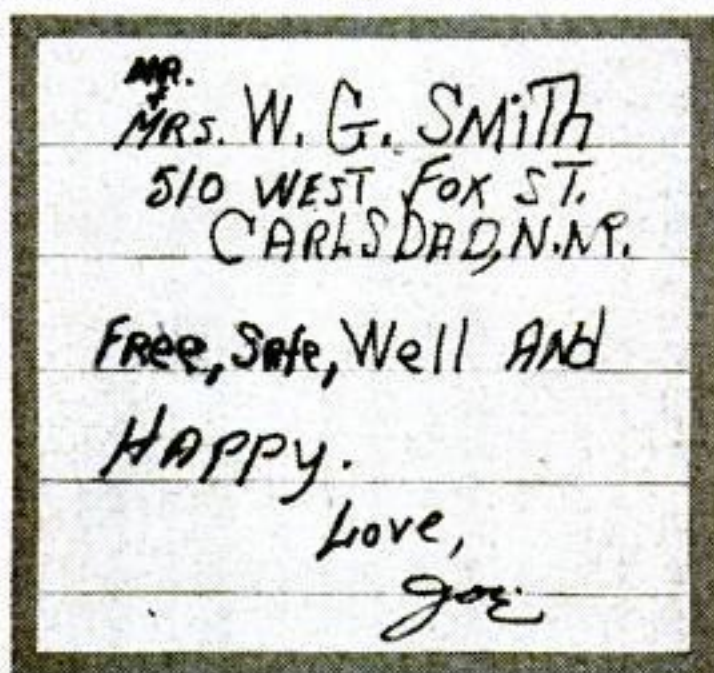

AS A YOUNGSTER in Carlsbad—Joe was youngest of three children—he was a Scout. He also delivered newspapers, jerked sodas, sold popcorn in the movies.

AT A FRATERNITY DANCE in 1939 at the University of New Mexico, Joe (second from left) paused to have this picture taken with a group of friends. In 1940 he married Barbara Dean Smith, the girl at his right. The other young men are Gene (center) and Dwayne Davis. They went to war with Joe, were also captured and died as prisoners.

ON HIS LAST LEAVE before going to the Philippines in September, 1941, Joe Smith showed off his sergeant's stripes. He was in Battery F, 200th Coast Artillery.

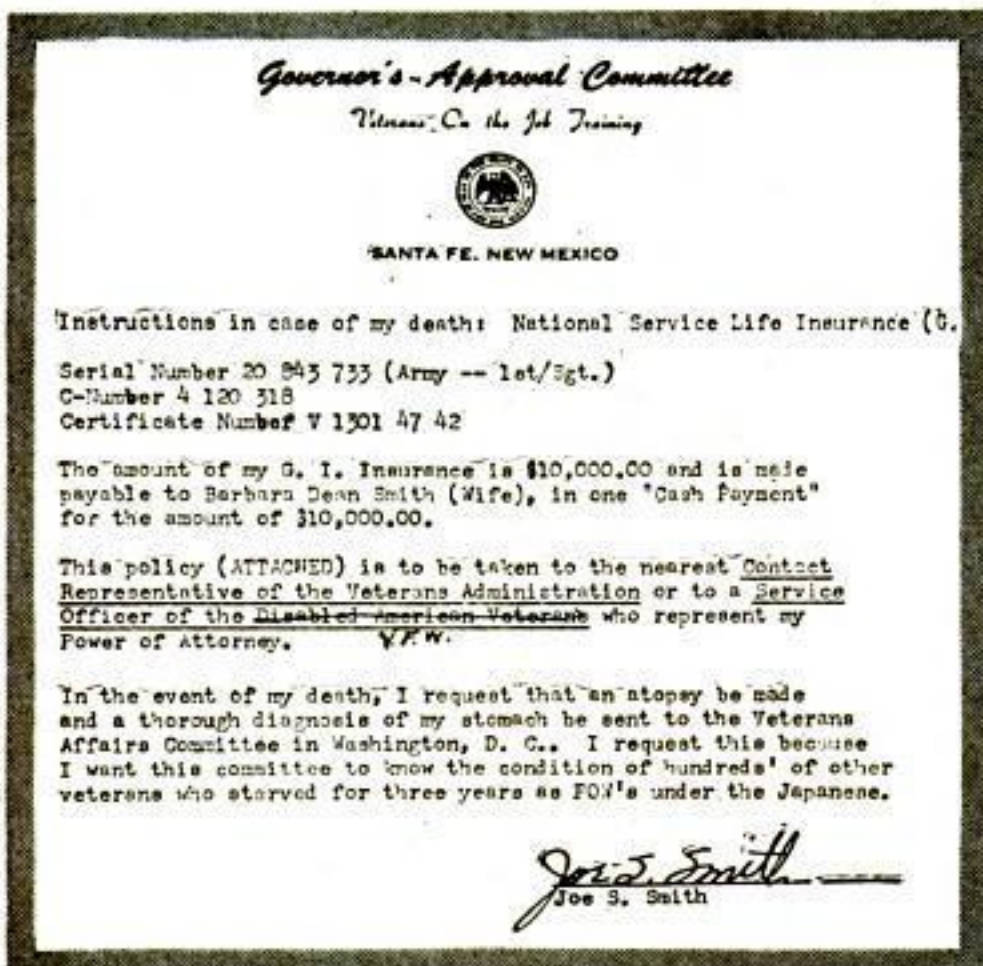

FIRST LETTER HOME after his liberation in Feb. 1945 was six words long. He suffered from extreme malnutrition which later caused him to lose his teeth.

HIS NEW CAR was the occasion for this picture taken in 1946 in Albuquerque. His son Ronnie was born only a few weeks before Joe left home in 1941, and had no recollection of his father. When Joe came back to Carlsbad in March 1945, still emaciated and sick, the 3½-year-old boy ran up to him shouting, "Look what I found! I found Daddy!"

IN ALBUQUERQUE in 1948, Joe spoke to Congressional subcommittee considering special promotions for ex-POWs, later was hired by the War Claims Commission.

HIS "WILL" contained a stipulation which showed that—as with many another wounded or diseased veteran—the war had a big place in his mind. His body was badly burned in the plane crash, making autopsy impractical.

THE PLANE CRASH, in which 28 passengers and crewmen were killed, occurred at the edge of the Dallas airport. Two engines on the DC-6 transport had failed, and as the pilot tried to make a landing the plane suddenly swerved, hit a building and burst into flames. Although rescuers arrived immediately, the blaze was so persistent that several hours elapsed before the last bodies could be removed from wreck and placed on waiting stretchers.

Joe's life was very full despite its shortness. The most remarkable thing he ever did was to survive 42 months in Japanese prisons after the fall of Bataan, but everything else he did was done ably and in a way that made people respect him. After he died his mother, speaking with great candor, said, "Bless his heart, he wasn't very pretty, but he was good."

WE SHOOT DOWN THE FIRST JAPS

TWO U. S. GUNNERS FROM NEW MEXICO MEET ATTACK ON PHILIPPINE FIELD
by SERGEANT JOE SMITH

IN PHILIPPINES Joe was photographed on Dec. 9, 1941 by LIFE Photographer Carl Mydans, who was also captured by Japs. About this time, Joe was writing an article about his first battle, which ran in LIFE on Dec. 22, 1941.

HIS HOUSE in Albuquerque was new—he moved into it this year. His family will be able to keep it because he carried enough life insurance—including a $10,000 policy he took out at the airport when he began his fatal trip.

HIS PARENTS, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Smith (here shown at funeral) remember Joe as an active young man. Of his son's school career, his father said, "He wasn't outstanding—he just seemed to make the teams he went out for."

HIS WIFE did not hear of his death until several days after it occurred. Mrs. Smith was in an Albuquerque hospital for the birth of her third child, and the news was kept from her until the doctor thought she was strong enough to stand it. Her other children (the baby will be named after his father) are Jo Melinna, 2, and 8-year-old Ronnie.

OTHER SURVIVORS of Japanese prison camps (New Mexico had a large National Guard contingent stationed in the Philippines) came to Joe's funeral and posed for a group picture. The photographer is Ray Davis, whose two sons (opposite page, top center) died when a U.S. sub sank the transport carrying them, as prisoners, to Japan.

LISTING PILOT On Nov. 30 gray-haired, mild-mannered Test Pilot Gene May, a 45-year-old grandfather, was haled into a Los Angeles traffic court and asked to walk the white line to prove whether he was drunk or sober. May failed (left). The morning after, May was at Muroc Dry Lake to show off the new Skyrocket jet-and-rocket plane Douglas Aircraft had built for the Navy, and May had officially flown faster than the speed of LISTING SHIP On Dec. 2 a Matson Lines Freighter, Hawaiian Rancher, was two miles out of Alameda, Calif. harbor when a fire started in the cargo of wallboard in her No. 2 hold. Full speed ahead, her hatches secured to damper the flames, she raced for the pier. She made it. But as firemen poured water into the hold, she heeled over to starboard toward the dock (left). The crew and firemen partly righted her and poured more water sound (760 mph) nine days before. Photographers asked him to fly along a black line parallel to their row of strobe lights. May came screaming across the field (right) 40 feet up, faster than the speed of sound—straight down the black line.

When he climbed out of the plane, photographers asked him his exact speed. May used an answer that would be handy in any traffic court: "Sorry, I can't say . . . They won't let me." In court next day he pleaded guilty, was fined $100.

into the still-burning hull. Then, with a rumbling groan, she heeled to port. Two crewmen (center), sure she was going to capsize, jumped into the harbor, one pausing at the rail long enough to remove his shoes. The fireboat scurried away (right), but the big ship came to rest, far over on her portside. Patiently the firemen partly righted her again, poured more water into her hold and put out the fire—after it had burned for more than seven hours and nearly gutted the ship.

THE RISE OF WESTERN GERMANY

EUROPE'S FATE RESTS UPON THE HONESTY OF OFFICIALS IN MAKING AND EXPLAINING THEIR POLICIES

People are worrying about Germany again. Four years and seven months after the unconditional surrender which was to bury German power for all time, the resurrection of German power is the foremost fact of Europe.

Consider Germany today: severed, occupied, impoverished, sick of soul and torn of body, so shackled and enfeebled that even to speak of "German power" is, on the face of things, to be absurd. Yet the U.S. and the Soviet Union are contending for the soul, the body, the power of Germany. The mere beginnings of resurrection, the first signs of sovereign vigor in the new government of West Germany are enough to alarm the whole of Western Europe. The policies of governments, the calculations of strategists and statesmen turn upon these certainties:

*Who holds Germany holds Europe;
and*

The shape and fate of Western Germany determine the shape and fate of Western Europe.

IT'S TIME TO END

ALL THE DOUBLE-TALK

On no other issue are clarity and simple honesty in public discussion so necessary—and so lacking.

The first and present danger is not that a revived Germany will menace Europe, but that the publics of the U.S. and all the West will not understand what their governments are doing or permitting to be done about Germany. The first task of government (and, we might add, of journalism) in the West is not to reconsider German policy, nor to change it, nor to fear it. The first task is to put an end to the official double-talk which now obscures the problem of Germany and Western policy toward Germany. Until and unless it is ended there can be no true understanding of what is involved; and without public understanding there can be no lasting and successful policy.

Is the obscurity necessary?

Let's look at a few of the many examples that might be cited.

If war starts in Europe, it will probably begin with a Red army attack upon Western Europe via Western Germany. Who in that event will fight for Western Europe in Germany? Will the Americans be there—in person, in effective numbers, fighting beyond or on the Rhine? It is useless for individual Americans to say, of course they'll be there, or to hazard that maybe another war won't be decided that way. The question persists in Europe, and the right answer would do much to iron out some of the uglier quirks in Germany, not to mention a boost to the morale of all Western Europe.

An official answer exists: THEY WILL BE THERE. But the answer is never given nowadays—not officially, not publicly. When the President or his principal defense executive, Secretary Johnson, are asked to give it out loud they practically fly into a panic and beg to be let off. And why?

Because, as the President and his advisers are persuaded, the American people and Congress would get the jitters. To give the answer in public, the Europeans are told, would be "politically impossible."

Now this is preposterous rot. General Omar Bradley gave the correct answer to Congress last May, only to have the effect destroyed by later niggings and evasions, and there was no upheaval. Republican Senator Robert A. Taft, no violent internationalist, has said again and again that he is all for a clear declaration that Americans will fight for Europe in Europe against any aggressor. If he is ready for it, most of Congress surely is. Only craven timidity can account for topside reticence on this score.

REARMAMENT WILL COME;

THE QUESTION IS WHEN

A tougher question is whether to rearm the Germans. On this subject some official reticence is justified. But evasive double-talk is not justified, and this is precisely what the Western public including the public of Germany is being fed right now.

Secretary Johnson said in Frankfurt last week, "President Truman has said that the U.S. has no intention to rearm Germany. That is official U.S. policy, with no hedging and no dodging."

That is official U.S. policy, all right, and it is a very silly statement.

Why is it silly?

Sooner or later the Western Germans are going to be rearmed, or they are going to rearm themselves.

This is not speculation. It is not LIFE's arbitrary opinion. It is a predictable certainty.

The certainty does not especially derive from the proclivities of the Germans. It derives from a decision taken in May of 1948 by six Western countries (the U.S., Britain, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg). With the decision then taken to establish a national German government in the Western zones of occupation, any question of whether the Germans would or would not rearm became essentially academic. So did a great many other troubling questions, such as whether the great concessions recently made to the Bonn government were mistaken or not. If they were mistaken, the mistake was made 18 months ago; the only mistake to be feared a few weeks ago was that inevitable developments would be postponed so long that nobody could benefit. To be effective, any national government must have or rapidly acquire the power to govern; the plight of Western Germany, the necessities of Western Europe made the success of the new government imperative to the victors who created it; and in this disordered world the possession of arms is one of the many privileges widely held to be necessary to governments, German or non-German. All this would be so if there were no Communist threat to Germany, no conflict with the Soviet Union and no move by the Soviets to recruit their own German army. The West German government of Chancellor Adenauer has not as yet asked for arms and armies. But it or one of its successors will. And when that day comes the victors cannot deny the request without wrecking the regime upon which their policy and the structure of Western Europe will in the meantime have come largely to rest.

Two questions about rearming remain open to useful debate: When? And in what kind of Western Europe?

Thanks in part to Columnists Joseph and Stewart Alsop, some relevant facts are available. No one worth taking seriously is proposing that the Western Germans be armed right away. What is being urged is that the civilian heads of government make up their minds right away, so that the defense potential of Western Europe can be accurately appraised. The actual arming would then be postponed to a date not determined. Field Marshal Montgomery is pressing hard for this. General Bradley is said to agree that it's bound to come. And so, according to the Alsop brothers, does none other than the No. 1 soldier of hesitant France, General de Lattre de Tassigny.

So far so good—at least the proposal can be understood, weighed, intelligently accepted or rejected. But then comes the double-talk. The impression is a-building that 1) Germans can be armed without creating a German army and a German command; and that 2) they will be securely under non-German command in a "Western European army."

For reasons previously mentioned, it would be folly to rest a policy upon these assumptions. To sell a policy to the people of the West on these assumptions would be to practice a cruel and damaging hoax. What is on the way is the re-creation of a German army under German command. Nothing else, and nothing less.

As for Germans serving in a "Western European army"—there is no such army. Nothing in the record of efforts to date to create a unified Western European defense system suggests that there will be such an army in the near future.

ONLY A TOTAL REVOLUTION

CAN MAKE GERMANY HEALTHY

Nevertheless the best hope of a tolerable and worthwhile Western Germany is the maximum unification—military, economic, political—of continental Western Europe. For only within such a community, freely governed and freely trading, can a revived Western Germany be healthily absorbed. Such a Western Europe including Germany is neither impossible nor even, in the long run, unlikely; but policy attitudes which take its achievement as a matter of course are mistaken and likely to defeat their own ends in Germany and elsewhere.

It must not be taken as a matter of course; it will never come into being if it is. In every sphere of policy Americans do well to press for it. But Americans must understand, better than they have as yet been given to understand, the enormous revolution of European life and habits involved. Nowhere in Western Europe is this more true than in Germany. There the revolution must be total.

FOLKS CHEERED A SOUP
THAT YOU MAY HAVE *today!

As Campbell's make it, this old Colonial favorite rates a welcome today for its hearty good eating

Good soup has always represented sound, substantial eating to energetic Americans. The early Colonists who cleared the wilderness ... achieved freedom ... moved westward ... founded a nation ... were nourished and fortified by a few homespun, honest dishes. Among them was chicken noodle soup.

Today Chicken Noodle Soup, as Campbell's make it, is a great favorite. At the family lunch... the children's noon meal ... the simple, satisfying supper ... this good soup becomes the main dish—quickly ready and an instant hit.

How long is it since you've served this fine soup? That gleaming chicken broth, those golden egg noodles, the tender pieces of chicken mean it's made in the time-honored tradition. And that means it's truly hearty!

RECIPE:

FOR BIRDS EYE STRAWBERRY LONG CAKE

(Long on lusciousness... short on work)

Beat 3 egg whites and dash of salt until foamy throughout. Add $\frac{3}{4}$ cup sugar, 2 tablespoons at a time, beating after each addition until sugar is blended. Then continue beating until mixture will stand in stiff peaks. Add $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon vinegar and $\frac{3}{4}$ teaspoon vanilla and beat well. (Entire beating time about 10 minutes.)

Using a spoon, form meringue into an oval shape $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch thick on unglazed paper on baking sheet. Build up sides to a height of about 3 inches with remaining meringue. Bake in a slow oven (300°F.) 30 to 35 minutes. Cool and remove from paper.

Fill center of meringue shell with spoonfuls of vanilla ice cream and top with red, ripe Birds Eye Strawberries. —none like 'em! Makes 4 servings.

AMBASSADOR'S DAUGHTER

Sharman Douglas, 21-year-old daughter of the U.S. Ambassador to Britain, arrived in New York with a spare mink coat on her arm and a "certificate" for typing proficiency in her luggage. When asked about her rumored romance with the Earl of Westmorland, she said, "Oh, dear, nothing to it."

Princess Margaret, 19-year-old daughter of the King of England, has worn low-cut dresses before (above). But recently she created a bit of a stir by purchasing a Dior creation which was even lower. After a glance at it her mother sent her off to the royal dressmaker to have some changes made.

PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER

Margaret Truman, 25-year-old daughter of the President of the U.S., gave a concert in Washington while her father "nearly tore up two programs" in parental enthusiasm. As usual the critics were less enthusiastic but conceded that the girl behind the grease paint had great poise—and courage.

A CARTOON BY DAVID LOW SHOWS BRITANNIA SCOLDING GOVERNMENT BUNGLER

SCANDAL IN PEANUTS

Britain has trouble making a nut farm of Tanganyika

The Tory press and politicians of Great Britain have been enjoying a circus with peanuts. The peanut, or groundnut as England knows it, can not only be eaten but can be used as a source of oil for margarine and soap. So in 1946 Frank Samuel of Unilever, the big British soapmaking firm, proposed that large tracts of scrub undergrowth in the African colony of Tanganyika should be cleared and put into peanuts. The socialist government seized on the idea. By adding Tanganyika peanuts to its other sources of fats and oils, the Empire would save scarce dollars now paid out to import them. Furthermore the government could carry out the project on a larger scale and with quicker results than private enterprise. The idea was good but not so easy as the government thought.

The government appointed a firm affiliated with Unilever to begin the £24 million ($96 million) job of clearing three million acres of Tanganyika's wild lands—an area as big as Connecticut. Special machinery was designed and shipped to Africa. But Tanganyika scrub was tougher than the British had calculated and the new peanut bureaucracy less efficient. The machinery did not work as planned and much broke down under hard usage. The job went slowly. Frustrated, the government created Overseas Food Corporation to finish the job. It also cut down the area to be cleared to 600,000 acres—about the size of Rhode Island—and raised the estimated cost to £50 million—a fifth as much land for twice the price. Peanuts became a political scandal.

Last month the Overseas Food Corporation issued a 156-page apologia for the failure of its peanut planning. The terrors of Tanganyika's terrain had been misjudged, the bookkeeping had been improper. Nevertheless the great project would proceed on its dusty way, said the government, and there would be peanuts and oils. Conservatives demanded an inquiry, but the House of Commons, 315 to 161, voted it down. Labor did not want to be bombarded with peanuts.

ON WEDDING NIGHT SACHA GUITRY AND HIS FIFTH BRIDE, ECATERINA MARCONI, ARRIVE AT PARIS NIGHTCLUB TO CELEBRATE BY DANCING ALMOST UNTIL DAWN

LOVE MARCHES ON

At 64, France's ever-ardent Sacha takes his fifth bride, who is 26

In Paris, where love is quite a lot, if not everything, elegant Sacha Guitry is a notably distinguished man. A matinee idol for nearly half a century, he has not only portrayed many of literature's classic lovers but also, as a playwright, has written himself romantic leads in dozens of sigh-drenched plays. France regards him as honestly ardent because he has carried love beyond the theater by marrying his leading ladies on an average of once each decade since 1907. He did it again last week. At the age of 64 he took pretty Ecaterina ("Lana") Marconi, 26, as the fifth Madame Guitry in a civil ceremony and then in a Greek Orthodox Church. Friends who danced with them that night (above) hoped for a durable marriage, but they remembered his second wife, whom he called "my sweetest cabbage," gave him up because of his perfection as a husband: his devotion became intolerable.

NO. 1 was Actress Charlotte Lysès, whom Guitry married in 1907. During war she aided Nazis, was jailed.

NO. 2 was Sacha's co-star Yvonne Printemps, his bride of 1919. Divorce followed "reciprocal adultery."

NO. 3 was leading lady Jacqueline Delubac, 25 when wed in 1935. She married Leslie Hore-Belisha in 1940.

NO. 4 was stage-struck debutante Geneviève de Sèreville, 18. This 1939 marriage lasted until 1947.

DUBINSKY'S GLAD-HANDING was hit of a party. Here he cements relations with Korea's Chun Chin Han.

ANTI-COMMUNIST WORKERS OF THE WORLD UNITE

Labor delegates from 40 countries convene in London, form organization to combat Red-dominated W.F.T.U.

In London last week labor leaders gathered to found a world federation for the labor unions of democratic countries. The American Federation of Labor participated for the first time. So did the U.S. Congress of Industrial Organizations, the British Trades Union Congress and the Dutch Federation of Labor, all of which earlier had quit the pro-Soviet World Federation of Trade Unions. The delegates in London represented 40 million workers of 40 nations. The U.S. sent a delegation of 21 to London—10 each from the A.F. of L. and the C.I.O., along with one lonesome representative of John L. Lewis' independent United Mine Workers. The U.S. delegation with its three advisers dominated the conference in size (it was more than twice as large as any other), in its sartorial elegance (bright neckties) and in diplomacy. To be sure Mike Quill, the belligerent boss of New York's C.I.O. transport workers, did arouse the displeasure of British union leaders by one blundering speech in his best Irish brogue, in which he attacked Northern Ireland as a British "slave state." But the C.I.O.'s peppery Walter Reuther smoothed over the meeting's principal controversy by proposing a neat compromise admitting Europe's Catholic trade union organizations to membership, a step which had been opposed by socialist delegates. And a Reuther pal, the A.F. of L.'s jovial, barrel-shaped David Dubinsky, proved the best ambassador for U.S. labor. Dubinsky slapped backs (above) and spread good fellowship like a walking delegate at a 1900 A.F. of L. convention.

POLISH DELEGATE, A. Skrodzki, represented "unions in exile." Iron Curtain nations ignored conference.

FRENCH DELEGATE, veteran leader Gaston Tessier, makes a successful plea for Europe's Catholic trade unions.

HOSTS, British miners' boss Will Lawther (center) and Arthur Deakin (left), greet the C.I.O.'s Allen Haywood.

GOODBY TO BOJANGLES

Forty-five thousand file by casket of Bill Robinson

Nearly everyone in the U.S. fondly recalled some personal memory of Bill ("Bojangles") Robinson. At some time during his 71 years he touched every heart. Grandson of a slave, he ran away from his Richmond, Va. home at 8, danced for pennies in saloons, worked as a stableboy, traveled in a vaudeville show. He hit the bigtime at Broadway's Palace, then in the movies. His style of skip-tapping across the stage and up and down a flight of stairs became the most imitated dance routine in show business. Few moviegoers would forget him teaching Shirley Temple to dance in The Little Colonel ("Now, honey, all you gotta do is listen with your feet").

But he became much more than a dancer. To the friends who flocked about him he was a counselor and helper, especially to someone in need. He gave most of his millions away, and when he died of heart trouble he was nearly broke. To others he was a spokesman for his race, a spokesman who carefully steered clear of ideologies.

When he lay in state 45,000 people stood in line to file by his casket. His long funeral cortege was watched by the biggest New York crowd that had ever turned out for such an occasion. And as his hearse rolled through Times Square, the hush was broken by a band playing Give My Regards to Broadway.

HIS FRIENDS' FEET line the curb as casket leaves Baptist church. More than a million watched funeral.

STUDY OF HALF A MILLION JAPANESE REVEALS THE FIRST DELAYED EFFECTS OF ATOMIC RADIATION

Monday, Aug. 6, 1945 was a day of rest for the people who worked in Hiroshima's Nihon-Seikem bullet factory. Fifteen-year-old Hatsue Kimura and her friends Noriko Saito and Keiko Abe had met at 8 o'clock sharp for a day's outing. They were dressed in the black pantaloons of wartime Japan and wore across their chests the broad canvas strap of the standard first-aid bag. The three girls managed by concerted shoving to board an overloaded streetcar. They stood beside the motorman as the hot, smelly trolley swayed down the city's main street. It was making good time, and most of the passengers were straining forward toward the open windows to catch the cooling breeze. They were now 850 meters from a point in history. It was 8:15 a.m.

The flash and blast that struck them came together. Hatsue remembers it as brilliant green and red. She remembers also that the streetcar was smashed backward, that the floor was a mass of terrified, crying people and that blood covered everyone. She lost consciousness.

When she recovered she crawled over the piled-up bodies to the rear of the streetcar. Here she found Noriko and Keiko. All three of the girls were badly burned on the face and neck, and their skin hung down in flaps. But Noriko was so seriously injured that she could not stand alone. Supporting Noriko between them, Hatsue and Keiko painfully made their way to the top of nearby Futabaya hill. There all three girls suddenly became sick and vomited violently. They struggled on. At the village of Nukushima, where they found a first-aid station set up in a schoolhouse, they collapsed. On the second day Keiko's mother and father found her and took her away. On the third day Hatsue went on alone to join her relatives in the country. On the fourth day Noriko died.

Hatsue's violent sickness ended on the third day, but her appetite did not return. Two weeks later her gums became bloody, and in two more weeks she was completely bald. For four months she was too weak to get out of bed. But by March her burns had healed completely, her hair had grown back and she was strong again. She had recovered.

Hatsue slipped back into the life that was springing up anew in Hiroshima. Her health was good, though her vision seemed poorer than it had been. In February of 1949 she got a job in the cafeteria of an American agency called the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission, which had been set up by the U.S.

government to find out just what the American bomb had done to its Japanese victims. It was here, suddenly and quite unexpectedly, that Hatsue became a major figure in the history of atomic warfare. One day this September, as the scientists were having lunch, a waitress brought Hatsue in from the kitchen. "This girl was badly burned in the bombing," she said, "and now she can't see so good." A doctor in the group examined her with a pocket ophthalmoscope—and made the most important discovery in Hiroshima's postbomb history. One after another the men looked into Hatsue's eyes and saw there the black pattern of a radiation cataract. Years after her apparently complete recovery Hatsue Kimura was going blind—the first survivor of the atomic bomb to show positive evidence of its terrible delayed effects.

How many more such victims will appear? To find the answer to this vital question, ABCC has begun what may become the greatest program of medical research ever set up for the study of a selected group. The subjects of this study are half a million human beings. Never before have so many faced so broad and searching an investigation.

HATSUE'S EYES are examined by ABCC doctors. Cataracts are inside eyes, stretch across back of lenses.

THREE CITIES ARE ABCC'S LAB

Before the full destructive power of the atomic bomb can be estimated, it will be necessary to know what kinds of abnormalities it can cause and how long these aberrations can remain concealed in seemingly healthy people. Only by patient examination of vast numbers of human subjects can ABCC's scientists obtain this knowledge. Even now, in its earliest phases, the program involves the study of 246,134 Japanese in Hiroshima, 221,914 in Nagasaki and 188,949 more in Kure, an undamaged city whose residents will serve as a normal control group.

A permanent organization, set up in 1947 and financed by the Atomic Energy Commission, ABCC is staffed by 550 Americans, Australians, Chinese and Japanese recruited from universities all over the world. Its members are able young scientists devoted, as young scientists usually are, to the challenging program they have launched. But the driving force behind ABCC's efforts is more than scientific devotion: it is a sense of fear—fear of what the bomb's radiation has done up to now and may yet do. Until ABCC began its study, this fear was based on laboratory experiments on lower animals—mostly fruit flies. Scientists had learned a good deal from these experiments about the strange and fearful changes that radiation could cause in animal life: sterility, stunted growth, malignancies and, worst of all, genetic mutations—the monstrous or freakish progeny born of irradiated parents and their descendants. But men are not fruit flies, and no one knew whether they would react in the same manner. Until the bombs fell on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, there was no way of finding out. But now, in the two blasted Japanese cities, ABCC has a sufficient number of human subjects for a scientific study of what the bombs did to the bodies of their victims (page 62) and what they will do to generations yet unborn (p. 65).

ABCC'S DIRECTOR is Lieut. Colonel Carl F. Tessmer, a brilliant young pathologist. In background is island to which many injured fled after bombing.

FLASH-BURNED BOY is measured by pediatrician. Growth of such children is checked regularly.

BOMB'S TOLL STILL MOUNTS

Soon after the bombs fell on Japan, the press carried grisly predictions of what the Allies would discover when they entered the country to survey the damage. The first was that they would find a great many dead, a prediction which was fully borne out. But there were others: that the cities would be uninhabitable for 75 years, that survivors would be sterile, that the children would be stunted, that the genes of the exposed population would be affected, that cancer and blood disease would increase, and that there would be delayed effects of radiation. But four years later (until the discovery of Hatsue Kimura) none of these predictions had been substantiated, and the first two had been proved false. Many people reached the premature conclusion that the radiation effects of the bombs were not, after all, very serious. Yet the very presence of ABCC in Japan suggests that the scientists themselves believe that there is a great deal still to be learned about this crucially important subject. And now, with the discovery of radiation cataracts in Hatsue's eyes (and more recently in the eyes of a dozen others, including her friend Keiko), there can be no doubt that the bomb does have delayed effects.

ABCC is searching for such effects among all the irradiated survivors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, particularly as regards blood disease, cancer and genetic damage. To date no significant increase in abnormalities has been noted in any of these fields. However it is still much too early to assume that there will never be any increase. Says Lieut. Colonel Tessmer, director of ABCC, "We have been in a world of unknowns ever since we dropped the two bombs on Japan. Years of research in the two bombed cities may help to lead us out of this darkness. No one today can predict with any scientific basis the long-term effects of these bombs on survivors. As a matter of fact we know so little that we cannot deny with any certainty that those who live in Hiroshima and Nagasaki today may not have in their bodies enough plutonium and other A-bomb by-products to destroy them in 15 or 30 years."

HIROSHIMA'S CHILDREN patiently wait their turn for a complete and detailed physical examination in ABCC's temporary laboratory and clinic.

Your Christmas dinner was on the Green Giant's mind 'way last spring. Special seed was planted in special soil. When each pod reached its "fleeting moment of perfect flavor"—whether midnight or dawn—these wonderful peas were picked and packed within three short hours, dewy-fresh. The Green Giant will see his reward in your face when you sit down to glorious peas like these.

PREGNANT WOMAN describes her location when bomb exploded as ABCC worker plots position on map of Hiroshima.

WILL BOMB AFFECT HEREDITY?

The A-bomb is like no other weapon: its toll in human destruction is not limited to the men and women who are shattered, scorched and poisoned by its blast, but may be carried down through successive generations to bring death and disfigurement to the descendants of the survivors. The study of the genetic effects of atomic radiation is the study of the A-bomb's children and its children's children. It is the most important and difficult of ABCC's tasks.

The first step in this herculean project was to examine and record every child born after the explosions in Hiroshima and Nagasaki and, for purposes of comparison, in the unbombed city of Kure. This meant that every pregnancy in the three cities had to be discovered. Fortunately for the investigators, pregnant women were required by Japanese law to report for extra rations from their fourth month on. The ABCC set up its clerks alongside the Japanese officials, interviewed every woman who came in and found out exactly where she was at the time of the explosion (above). To be sure that their files were complete, the scientists conferred regularly with the midwives (who deliver 95% of Japanese babies), hoping to learn of unreported pregnancies or of abnormal births concealed out of shame.

The geneticists of ABCC know that the A-bomb's radiation can produce mutations. What they do not know—what no one can know for a great many years—is the number and kinds of mutations it can produce in humans. For one thing, most of the Japanese who received sufficient radiation to affect their genes died of their injuries. For another, many genetic changes cannot be observed; they are recessive and may not appear for three or four generations. And even if the bombs increased as much as tenfold the natural incidence of mutations, there would still be only one in several thousand—an increase almost too small to be noted, but a serious threat to the human race.

There are few facts as yet about the bomb's genetic consequences, but there are probabilities. The most frightening of these is that there are consequences, endless and uncontrollable, which will plague forever descendants of the people who survived the first atomic attacks.

HEALTHY BABY is examined by American and Japanese doctors. To date no figures on incidence of abnormalities in post-bomb babies have been released.

Young Minnesota Couple Celebrates a "Diamond" Jubilee!

MEET BILL BECKMAN of Brainerd, Minn. He's just won a nationwide Diamond Match cartoon contest. Bill's 27 and a go-getting, order-taking salesman for Nash-Finch, large food wholesalers.

MEET BILL'S BRAINCHILD! It won the cartoon contest. Best of all the entries which poured in from every state in the union! Bill sure knows a good match when he sees one.

PROOF? Meet Bill's pretty young wife, Marcella—26. Bill married her just before he went overseas in January '44. Bill wrote her every day from India. Wouldn't you?

IT WAS A HAPPY DAY for Bill when Bob Harrison, Diamond Match representative, called on Bill at 809 Ivy St. to tell him he had come through with a winner!

BUT WINNERS are no novelty to Bill. How about Billy 1½ and Dick 2½? Here they wave good-bye to Daddy as he starts out on his morning rounds.

BILL'S RIGHT in there when it comes to selling. Looks as though he's going to make a sale to Art Lyonais who owns a grocery store and tourist cabins in Brainerd.

BILL NOT ONLY sells the bacon—he brings it home too! Ray Swenson, manager of one of Nash-Finch's 57 busy outlets, likes to see those orders come rolling in!

AND WHEN THE DAY is over Bill tries to relax and read the evening paper. But he's got a couple of live wires—and here they've crossed right in front of him! But Bill's not really burned!

AND THAT TENDER juicy sirloin steak that Marcella is starting won't be either. You're right, she's an excellent cook. In fact she cooks with gas—lit with Diamond King-Size Matches, you bet!

AND WHEN BILL has had a good feed, and when he's got some time off the next day—he tackles his tackle. Tomorrow night if Bill's had a lucky day there'll be fresh fish a-frying at 809 Ivy!

Diamond King-Size Matches have long king-size sticks (protect fingers) light instantly, surely (made from clear white pine) are strong, wind resistant (burn in 15 mile wind) moisture resistant, non-poisonous, have no afterglow, are even room deodorizers! (Surprised? Light a few and see!)

THE DIAMOND MATCH COMPANY, makers of paper plates, paper towels, wax paper, paper napkins, toilet tissue, toothpicks, wooden forks, spoons, clothespins and many other household helps.

NEW TELEPHONE

EXHAUSTIVE RESEARCH PRODUCES NEW SHAPE AND CONTROLLED RING

In the 74 years since Alexander Graham Bell first spoke over his crude voice box, the telephone has undergone at least 17 major design changes (right). The newest version (bottom right) will soon be distributed in limited numbers. It does not look very different from its immediate predecessor, but it is one of the most complete re-engineering jobs in the instrument's history. Almost all of its 400 parts have been redesigned. An automatic equalizer has been added which helps keep the sound volume uniform no matter how far away the phone is from the central exchange. A manual control on the base permits the user to adjust its ring to any intensity from a loud clang to a murmur. To make it easier to service, all mechanical parts are attached to the phone's base, instantly accessible when the outer shell is lifted off.

To the layman, the most obvious change in appearance will be the dial. For easier visibility the exchange numbers and letters have been moved outside the finger wheel—long a standard arrangement on public pay phones. In their place white dots have been located under the finger holes as targets to increase speed and accuracy in dialing.

For the vast majority of subscribers the new model is the phone of the distant future. With 30 million telephones in operation all over the U.S., change-overs from one model to the next are a costly and gradual process. The third phone from the bottom (right) is the most familiar in the U.S. today, and even many of the old uprights are still being used. By the time the newest model is distributed, it will almost certainly be outmoded itself.

TELEPHONE DEVELOPMENT began in 1875 with a tiny instrument in a square frame (top center) which transmitted the human voice only as an unintelligible garble. To the left of it appears the 1876 model over which Bell spoke the first words to be understood. The square box (top right) was the first telephone to go into actual consumer service in 1877. The next desk model was the upright which went through many phases until the one-handed French phone, the grandfather of the new 1950 model, came into general use in the late 1920s.

FIFTH AVENUE BEAUTY HUNT

The prettiest girls in America walk along its pavement. Or do they?

The rest of the U.S. may not agree, but the merchants along New York's Fifth Avenue have long believed that they see day in and day out the greatest concentration of pretty, well-groomed girls in the nation. Foreign visitors passing through reinforce this belief with unsolicited admiring comments. Oglers (right) find the avenue a fruitful place for their innocent pastime. And photographers looking for pulchritude often have only to stroll leisurely up and down Fifth Avenue for a few minutes, taking their pick from the parade of television actresses, fashion models, singers, stenographers and other Manhattan career girls who gravitate there during the lunch hour to shop.

To put this beauty theory to the test, LIFE last week stationed half a dozen photographers along and just off Fifth Avenue on two separate days and instructed them to make a dispassionate record of the good-looking girls who came along. On these pages and the cover is a small sampling of their pictures, taken as the girls happened by. To New Yorkers they prove, as much as anything can, that Fifth Avenue is easily the most beautifully decorated street in the world. What they prove to Richmond, Va. or Dallas, Texas or Portland, Ore. or points between is probably something else.

TENSE MOMENT in "The Man Who Killed Hitler" on Hands of Murder show occurs when the hero receives a threatening phone call from someone who tells him he had better stop telling people he saw Hitler (p. 85).

ANNOUNCER STARTS "HANDS OF MURDER"

TERROR ON TV

KILLERS, CORPSES, PRIVATE EYES START CLOGGING CATHODE TUBES

For years on radio, shrieks, groans and the ominous dripping of blood were acknowledged as sure-fire ways to higher Hooper ratings. But television was rather timid about tossing terror into its viewers' laps. Last year TV networks had only one regular mystery show. This year there are 10 and more are on the way. Sponsors are getting more interested in paying for them, and big acting names like Ralph Bellamy and Boris Karloff are interested in playing in them.

Although, as in the movies, there is a capricious TV taboo against showing murderous cause and effect in a single image (the gun flash and the falling body are usually shown separately) living room sets can turn up enough horror to send the lily-livered skittering. Some fine bloodcurdling effects are produced by using a close-up of the victim's hand with blood slowly dribbling down over the fingers. Oldest TV mystery show is Suspense. Among the newest and most skillful is Du Mont's Hands of Murder. The programs shown here are part of a single week's TV crop. With a grisly gamut running through the evening, parents are going to have a tougher time than ever getting the young ones to bed after the regular children's programs wind up.

BURNING CANDLE is used by Lights Out announcer, who is the former mystery movie actor, Jack La Rue.

Henri Matisse, 80

At his studio in Nice, Matisse sits like a Buddha before stained glass window he designed. He has almost given up climbing ladders to paint large murals and now uses a brush attached to a 4-foot pole. When Photographer Mili's flashgun failed to go off Matisse roared with laughter, shouted, "Your machine gun has jammed!"

THE OLD MEN OF MODERN ART

Their passing will mean the end of a memorable era

PHOTOGRAPHED FOR LIFE BY GJON MILI

Fifty years ago, a band of brash young Parisians plunged the entire art world into a ferment with the shocking experiments that were the beginnings of the modern movement. The talents of these innovators—men like Henri Matisse (above) and Pablo Picasso (last color page)—proved so great and their styles so provocative over the years as to virtually enslave thousands of younger artists everywhere in roles no better than those of imitators. Now the founders and proprietors of modernism are old men (average age: 67), and the inevitable fact confronting the world is that their days are numbered. As they die, the historic era which they pioneered and ruled will die too. But through the sensational art they leave behind, their influence will continue to rule until the time when other, younger men evolve a vision of their own. On these pages are Photographer Gjon Mili's portraits of nine of the most famous of these gifted old moderns.

Fernand Léger, 68

Mili photographed Léger in this remarkable pose in order to make the artist appear to be sprouting from among a cluster of his paintings. Born in Normandy, Léger is a big, genial and thoroughly Gallic individualist who spent 4½ years in America during the war and never took the trouble to learn a word of English.

Marc Chagall, 62

A Russian by birth but now a naturalized French citizen, Chagall paints dreamy, introspective pictures like this one of a rooster. He was quite willing to pose for Mili but appeared worried about the outcome. "It is difficult to photograph me," he said, "unless it could be done in my sleep, because I pose continually." Nonetheless he was pleased with Mili's result.

Raoul Dufy, 70

Polished, highly intellectual, Dufy once was forced to support himself as a designer of upholstery and wallpaper in Montmartre. Not until his 40s did he develop his chic and brilliant style. Here he is shown at work on a sunny terrace in Caldas de Montbúy, Spain, where periodically he goes to bathe in natural hot spring water because he is crippled with arthritis.

Ossip Zadkine, 59

In his Paris studio, Zadkine sits on a box in the midst of his towering, elongated sculpture. Unlike most of the Russian artists living in France, Zadkine is gay, effervescent and, according to Mili, "flits around like a bug." Though he is a comparative youngster among the old moderns, he is the only one who is called "Papa" by his friends.

Marie Laurencin, 64

Only surviving woman of the original moderns, Laurencin is prim, conservative and always wears a kitchen apron when she paints. Years ago she had a celebrated love affair with Guillaume Apollinaire, great French modern critic, but was never able to marry him because of demands of her domineering mother.

Maurice Vlaminck, 73

Famed for violent and moody pictures, Vlaminck, a native Frenchman, reminisces jovially about his past. Successively a bicycle racer, a nightclub musician and artist, he once created a sensation among his Parisian friends by sporting a wooden necktie, which he painted and repainted as it suited his mood.

Jean Arp, 61

Wearing a floppy peasant hat, Arp polishes an abstract statue in his garden near Paris. Quiet, taciturn, Arp used to be spectacularly uninhibited. He once helped organize an exhibit whose entrance hall passed through a lavatory and which displayed, among other oddities, an alarm clock submerged in a tank of fake blood.

Pablo Picasso, 68

Mili placed a flower over Picasso's left ear and bathed him in reddish light to recapture his first impression of the artist, that of a proud, copper-skinned South Sea Island chieftain. He found Picasso on a beach at Golfe-Juan on the French Riviera surrounded by admirers, grandly holding court in his swimming shorts.

A BOY BECOMES A MAN

Australian aborigines dance in primitive rite

The frightened young boy in the savage tableau above is passing from childhood into manhood. He has just been circumcised according to ancient ritual, and hereafter, in the eyes of his fellow aborigines, he will enjoy the status of a full-grown man. Now, while he sits silently and in pain on a fire-heated stone, clay-smeared tribesmen race around him in a frenzy, whipping and stabbing the air to destroy any evil spirits which might harm him.

This dance is the climax of the coming-of-age ritual which is the most solemn moment in the lives of Australian aborigines, one of the earth's most primitive people. Cut off for thousands of years from the main stream of cultural evolution, they have preserved their prehistoric way of life unchanged, although modern pipes and belts (above) add an incongruous touch to their ancient rites. Almost exterminated by early white settlers, the aboriginal tribes now live unmolested on remote government reservations. Once they were the only human inhabitants of Australia. Today there are only 50,000 left.

How to Make Millions

Nobody but nobody does the two better than the boss of plain old Gimbels

WELL after 12 o'clock one New York night not long ago, the sharp ring of a bedside telephone stabbed the stillness of an apartment in New York's swank Park Lane Hotel. A muscular arm reached out to lift the receiver, and a sleepy male voice spoke gruffly, "Hello."

"Mr. Gimbel?" asked a querulous female voice.

"Yes," answered the man, "this is Bernard Gimbel."

"You don't know me, Mr. Gimbel," said his caller, "but I want to ask you a question. Have you ever spent the night on a chaise longue?"

"Why—no," Mr. Gimbel replied. "I've often spent an hour or two on one very pleasantly, but I do my sleeping in bed—where I am now."

"Well," exploded the woman, "I know it's late, but I've been trying to sleep on a chaise longue for a week, and I want to know where the bed is that I bought at Gimbels two weeks ago."

Big Bernard (pronounced Bernard) Gimbel, the 6-foot, 210-pound multimillionaire merchant and sportsman who heads the great network of Gimbels and Saks department stores, chuckles when he tells this story of a shopper's satisfying revenge. "And did she get her bed the next day?" he concludes. "I'll say she did."

"But seriously," he continues (and Gimbel is nearly always serious when discussing his business), "I don't mind things like that. We sell about a million dollars' worth of stuff every business day. Say the average sale is $4, that makes 250,000 transactions a day. You'd be surprised how many people seem to think I keep track of all of them. I am always meeting people who feel embarrassed and apologize to me because their account at Saks Fifth Avenue is three months overdue."

As the foregoing rightly suggests, Bernard Feustman Gimbel is an extraordinarily busy merchant prince. He is also an extraordinarily likable human being. The qualities that make him such are of the elusive kind which some people sum up as a gift for friendship, and which his friend Mayor O'Dwyer of New York more grandly calls "a great feel for life." He is the nearest thing that New York has to the old-fashioned sage and friendly general storekeeper, poking playfully and persistently into all phases of the city's life. He is a fixture at the city's big parties, banquets, boxing matches and theater openings.

Like most prominent New Yorkers, Gimbel was born and bred a long way from the Hudson. His present business interests span the whole land. The Gimbels empire has department stores in seven cities besides New York: Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Beverly Hills and Miami Beach; there are also seasonal resort branches in Princeton, New Haven, Palm Beach, Southampton and Petoskey, Mich. There can be no question, however, that in mind and spirit Bernard Gimbel is a New Yorker to the core. At 64, even-tempered and mild-spoken, he plainly loves the chattering city's nervous blare. He contributes no little to it himself with the brassy, folksy advertisements which boast that "Nobody, but nobody" undersells or in any way excels "plain old Gimbels." For years he calculatedly kept the 28 acres of his New York emporium as dowdy as was decent, on the shrewd theory that lack of fancy frills would encourage bargain hunters. But these days he rejoices that Gimbels is being smartly refurbished to a design by Raymond Loewy. "Ma foi!" exclaimed a recent ad heralding the great change, "Gimbels (née plain old Gimbels) with an elegant new hat salon???"

AN INDEFATIGABLE FLOORWALKER through his own and competitors' stores, Gimbel learned his trade by working briefly at all kinds of jobs.

With the same peppery zest Gimbel revels in his rivalry with Macy's, celebrated in song, joke and a hit movie (Miracle on 34th Street) featuring a "Mr. Gimbel" and a "Mr. Macy" miraculously reconciled by a Kris Kringle in person. There has, of course, been no "Mr. Macy" at Macy's since the founder's death in 1877. In real life Macy's late Board Chairman Percy Straus was Bernard Gimbel's across-the-road country neighbor, and Mr. Gimbel and Macy's present President Jack I. Straus are friends of long standing. But their commercial rivalry is real and rugged. A newfangled window curtain, advertised by Macy's one Sunday recently at $3.49, was simultaneously offered by Gimbels at $2.99. Price cutting took place daily until both stores were selling the curtain at a little over $1. On a grander scale Gimbel recalls with quiet glee the way his younger brother Fred, then executive head of Gimbels in New York, snatched the famed Hearst art collection from under Macy's nose in 1940. Over $4 million worth of ancient armor, tapestries, stained glass, etc., plus a complete 12th Century Spanish monastery, were sold off plain old Gimbels' floors.

Bernard Gimbel—"Bernie" to friends and "Beany" to his wife and intimates—loves even New York's overcrowded streets, for when he does not see friends on them he sees at least potential customers. His enthusiasm for the city reaches an annual peak during the Christmas season, when shoppers by the million pour into Gimbels from the three railroads, four subways and four bus lines which service that strategically placed store. With his broad, red face, whitening hair and portly figure, Gimbel could easily stand in for one of his stores' Santas without make-up, and he enjoys acting like one. Parents of young children who merely drop in for the evening at the Gimbel country house in the weeks before Christmas are apt to find themselves driving home with a car full of toys.

Gimbel has a store for all New York pocketbooks: from Gimbels' basement, with its raucous demonstrators of hair oil and patent foot remedies, through somewhat tonier Saks 34th Street, to swank Saks Fifth Avenue, in whose plush, hushed salons the wealthy woman can pay $1,000 for a baum marten-chokered evening outfit and $35,000 for a sable coat.

Gimbel's house is in the rolling "back country" of Greenwich, Conn., where he loves to entertain at his 200-acre estate, Chieftans (so named and spelled by a previous owner). Chieftans has a swimming pool, a tennis court, a stable of prize horses, squadrons of servants and gardeners, and a big home which—both for the grand sweep of its rooms and the grand variety of transients streaming through them—has been aptly compared with Grand Central Station.

A budding patriarch, Gimbel takes enormous pride in the Gimbel name, fame and family—an energetic, close-knit and somewhat Nowhere, at no time, is Gimbel ever at a loss to find fun. He enjoys a morning canter, an afternoon of golf, a day at the races, a weekend of fishing, a long evening of gin rummy or towie (three-handed bridge). He protests, however, that tales of the fabulous stakes he plays for are gross exaggerations. In reality, he says, he plays only $10 Nassau at golf ($10 for the first nine holes, plus $10 for the second nine and $10 for the match) and 5¢ a point at gin rummy. That way "nobody wins or loses more than three or four hundred dollars."

But above all, as 84-year-old Uncle Ellis, board chairman of Gimbel Brothers, Inc. and the last surviving brother of the founding generation, likes to say, "That Bernard! He loves that business!" For all his gusto, gambling and gregarious good fellowship, there is a cool and sober Bernard Gimbel who is one of the shrewdest, toughest, most assiduous businessmen in the U.S. His career and personality can be studied with as much profit by any aspiring American businessman as by any Marxist really interested in learning what makes a free economy run.

One million dollars a day

AS ITS chief executive and dominant stockholder, Gimbel is unquestioned boss of a coast-to-coast, $1 million-a-day empire of 15 stores and 20,000 employees. This he rules with a gentle hand, keeping strictly within his self-assigned roles as the company's No. 1 scout, public-relations man and coach of his crack team of store heads. He bombards the store heads with suggestions about everything from inventory strategy to signs in the elevators, but except in matters of major company policy they are free to accept or reject his advice. It took him eight years to persuade his first cousin, Adam Long Gimbel, head of Saks Fifth Avenue, that the Fifth Avenue store should be air-conditioned. That the store heads accept his suggestions more often than they reject them reflects less his authority than their respect for his seasoned shrewdness.

Though Gimbel is fiercely loyal to his store heads, and unfailingly pleasant in his dealings with them, they well know that his first loyalty is always to the company. "If Beany ever decided that I wasn't doing this job right," says Adam Gimbel thoughtfully, "I think he'd fire me. He'd help me get another job—and a good one, too—but I think he'd fire me." No less than three Gimbel first cousins have parted with the company more or less voluntarily since Bernard became president.

Gimbel serves as a good laboratory specimen of U.S. big businessman precisely because his business talents, while exercised in an arena of uncommon size, are essentially no different from those of the run of successful U.S. businessmen. He is neither an innovator like Henry Ford, nor a pioneering humanitarian employer like Shoe King George F. Johnson or "Golden Rule" Nash, nor a civic-minded businessman-statesman of the brand of Bernard Baruch or Paul Hoffman. His hyperkinetic pursuit of business and sport has left him little time for contemplation or for grappling with the great issues of his time. He almost never reads a book. "I doubt," says one friend, "if Bernie ever willingly spent an evening by himself in his life."

Neither the capitalist villain of Marxist mythology nor the altruistic benefactor of a press agent's puff, Gimbel handles his labor relations with a conspicuous lack of pretentious paternalism. Most Gimbel clerks work against commission, and some in the house furnishings departments clear $10,000 to $15,000 a year. But the base pay of Gimbel employees is no higher than the competition—and the unions—compels. Gimbel Brothers has no pension or profit-sharing plans for its rank and file. Gimbel explains his political record (four votes for Franklin Roosevelt) by saying, "A lot of these fellows are always trying to elect a man they can control. I prefer to get behind a man who can be elected and take my chances with him afterward."

During the celebration of the Gimbel centenary in 1942, his top subordinates presented Bernard Gimbel with a plaque praising his extraordinary "combination of strength and gentleness." "Bernie's reputation for honesty and fair dealing is unsurpassed," testifies President F. M. Flynn of the New York Daily News. To Gimbel, good repute is the most essential of business assets. The keynote of his career is what he himself calls "enlightened selfishness." The qualifying adjective merely means that, like a lot of his business contemporaries, he has recognized that in the long run it simply does not pay to fleece the customer, or starve the help, or try for fast fat profits.

It took a long time for many Americans to realize that Bernard Gimbel was a businessman at all. He first came to wide public notice in the 1920s as a member of the "international sporting set." He made news with such exploits as the hiring of a private railway car to take his friends to a big fight and having the Vulcania make a special stop at the Adriatic island of Brioni (now Marshal Tito's summer playground) to let the Gimbels visit friends. The good-looking Mrs. Gimbel and her twin girls shortly became sports figures in their own right as they skimmed the hurdles of fashionable horse shows astride the famous Gimbel jumpers. With this lavishly publicized background, it was natural to assume, as many people did when Bernie Gimbel succeeded his father as president of Gimbel Brothers in 1927, that he owed his promotion to his family connections.

The facts are quite different. Bernard Gimbel's father and uncles had little to do with his elevation to the presidency of what already had ceased to be solely a family firm. On the contrary, his extraordinary energy and abilities are largely responsible for building the business to its present magnitude. In 1907, when young Bernard started work in it at 21, Gimbel Brothers sold about $15 million worth of goods. Twenty years later, in prosperous 1927, when Ber-

When I was filming "Mrs. Mike," we actually used real snow on the sets. Huge machines were brought onto the set which ground great cakes of ice into streams of snow. While the rest of the country was sweltering in summer heat, I spent day after frostbitten day in sub-freezing temperatures...

In scenes like this, with Dick Powell, my hands almost froze...

And in another scene, my hands were in soapy water for hours...

To soften, a lotion should be absorbed by upper layers of skin. Jergens contains quickly-absorbed ingredients doctors recommend — no heavy oils that merely coat skin. Proof? Water won't "bead" on hand smoothed with Jergens (left hand) as with a lotion that leaves a heavy, oily film (right hand).

nard Gimbel became its president, the company had a $123,595,549 sales volume and a $1,658,535 profit before taxes. Last year, the 21st of his presidency, Gimbel Brothers sold $307,289,788 worth of goods and showed a before-taxes profit of $14,678,217.

The Gimbels' empire really came out of a peddler's pack. It was carried on the back of Bernard's grandfather, Adam Gimbel, a sturdy young Bavarian immigrant who landed in New Orleans in 1835, aged 20, with $5 in his pocket. After seven years of peddling his wares up and down the midcontinental rivers, Adam had saved enough to open a small trading post, grandiloquently named the Palace of Trade, at Vincennes, then a frontier town on the Wabash in Indiana.

Aside from hoary legends like the one that old Adam could bend a half dollar in his powerful fingers, the Gimbels (a notably unsentimental clan) now remember little about the founder of the family fortunes. What is remembered is characteristically pragmatic. In the days when a merchant's stature was measured by his ability to drive a sharp bargain with each customer, Adam Gimbel astounded Vincennes by establishing a policy of one price for all. And while other merchants were letting the buyer beware, he posted in his Palace of Trade a sign which read, "If anything said or done in this store looks wrong or is wrong, we would have customers take for granted that we shall set it right as soon as it comes to our knowledge. We are not satisfied unless the customers are." The Palace of Trade satisfied its customers and grew until it occupied four buildings, one on each corner of Vincennes' main square. Thus early in Gimbel history did the practice of "enlightened selfishness" start proving itself.

Adam Gimbel sired 14 children; 10 were boys, and seven grew to manhood. Bernard Feustman Gimbel, elder son of Adam's second son Isaac, was born in a modest clapboard house in Vincennes on April 10, 1885. Two years later Isaac and his six brothers, having learned their father's business from the floor (which they swept) up, organized the firm of Gimbel Brothers and opened a store in Milwaukee.

"A very dangerous fellow"

PONY-RIDING and rat-shooting are Gimbel's most vivid memories of his Milwaukee childhood. He was 9 when the prospering brothers Gimbel struck eastward, buying the Granville B. Haines store in Philadelphia. Young Bernard attended old Penn Charter School, where he played football, began to box and won tests of strength. At the University of Pennsylvania, where he enrolled in the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, he starred in the roughest sports: he played football and water polo and became a wrestler and boxing champion. His great regret of college days is that he narrowly missed making Phi Beta Kappa too. In later years he found some solace in the fact that his athletic prowess allowed him to box with such ring greats as "Philadelphia Jack" O'Brien, Bob Fitzsimmons, Stanley Ketchel and Jack Johnson. Gene Tunney, whom he discovered when they began sparring in 1919, remembers his friend as "a very dangerous fellow" in the ring, with a punch harder than that of most professionals he met. Still an enthusiastic fight fan, Gimbel has been a director of Madison Square Garden since 1929 and board chairman since 1947.

After college Bernard Gimbel followed the family tradition by setting out to learn the business. He began on the receiving platform of the Philadelphia store. But his rise through the ranks was uncommonly swift; he was made vice president in 1909. The next year, staking everything they had, the Gimbel brothers plunged into the most fiercely competitive of U.S. markets: New York City, where Macy's was already 52 years old.

Almost at once young Bernard displayed his canny and calculated daring. For all their courage, the senior Gimbels unanimously turned thumbs down when the Hudson & Manhattan R. R. Co. offered to sell, for $9 million, the store site at Broadway and 33rd Street which Gimbel Brothers was renting for $655,000 a year. Only Bernard wanted to take the risk. With the support of two of his father's closest friends, Sears, Roebuck's late Julius Rosenwald and Thompson-Starrett's Louis Horowitz, he won over his elders. The result was the first of the highly profitable real estate and financial deals which have distinguished his career. One of the latest, his decision in 1940 to buy the building and site of the Gimbels Pittsburgh store, has already saved his company $6 million.

Time tested and tightened young Bernard's grasp of the fast-expanding business. In 1922, largely at his urging, Gimbel Brothers ceased to be a family firm and brought in fresh capital with a public stock offering. In 1923, sitting on a coffin in the baggage car half of a crowded smoker while returning from a weekend on the Jersey shore, Bernard Gimbel closed the deal with Horace Saks, his close friend, that was to send low-priced, mass-merchandising Gimbels into the dizzy world of high fashion. Saks was then making a fat million-dollar yearly profit before taxes at the Saks & Co. store on 34th Street, in the Broadway block between Gimbels and Macy's. But he, too, was expansion-minded and needed fresh capital to finance his plan for a new store on Fifth Avenue. Gimbel Brothers could raise the money. Against considerable opposition from both their families, the two friends joined forces. In return for $8.1 million of Gimbel Brothers stock, Saks & Co. became a Gimbel subsidiary. In 1925, the year after the new Fifth Avenue store opened, Horace Saks died and the store was turned over to Adam Gimbel (whose wife Sophie is the store's famed dress designer). Since then Saks Fifth Avenue has become the nation's largest purveyor of luxury goods. It was chiefly Saks profits that carried the parent company through the worst years of the depression.

When Isaac Gimbel became paralyzed after being thrown from a horse in 1925, Julius Rosenwald, then Gimbel Brothers' dominant stockholder, chose Bernard to succeed his father. Shaving a rental here and a mortgage premium there, the new president led the company safely through the red depression years, and in 1934 brought it back into the black.

His next great coup came with World War II. With faith in his private sources of information and his own strong hunch, Gimbel decided, against the advice of a numberless array of self-appointed experts, that it was going to be a long war. Promptly borrowing over $20 million, he began stocking up heavily on consumer goods likely to grow scarce. This big Gimbel gamble paid off richly; among other items, Gimbels' $3.5 million inventory of nylon and silk stockings lasted well into 1943. By 1944 Gimbel Brothers was selling $194.5 million worth of goods annually and became, for the first time, the volume leader in its field. "Bernard Gimbel," declared FORTUNE the following year, "has become the top merchant of the U.S."

In sport and fun, tireless Bernie is much the same personality as Gimbel, the triumphant enterpriser. Golfer Gimbel strides from tee to green with the same driving will to win that marks rivalry with Macy's. He doesn't always win, however. Bobby Jones, pocketing his winnings after a profitable round with Gimbel, once remarked happily, "My favorite opponent is a fellow with a lot of dough and a fast backswing." But Bernie cheerfully pays the price to keep alive the hope of turning in one more card below 80. One day last summer he was overjoyed when, for a tournament at the Century Country Club near his home, he drew the club champion as a partner. Eagerly he spoke of rest, training, practice for the great occasion. Then, a day or two before the battle, came catastrophe: the champ was on the telephone, calling it off: "My uncle is very ill in Boston, and I've got to go up." Beneath this blow Bernie Gimbel as usual refused to bow. "If your uncle is very ill," he countered, "there's really not much you can do for him up there, and there's a hell of a lot you can do for me here."

Possessed of a heroic appetite for good food and good drink, Gimbel takes heroic measures to counteract it. When vacationing in Miami Beach he regularly sets out at 6 a. m. for a vigorous session of golf, bundled in weight-reducing long woolen underwear, two sweaters and a jacket. During the depression, when every day brought shocks enough to shake his prized mental-physical balance, Gimbel regularly went out before breakfast to run four to six times around Chieftans' half-mile horse track.

"MILLIONAIRE STRAPHANGER" Gimbel rides subway to save time. This keeps him in close touch with customers of his low-price New York stores.

Gimbel's friends incline to think that he overdoes the physical fitness business. One of his regular fishing companions, Stanton Griffis, who was recently appointed ambassador to Argentina, complains, "The only trouble with Bernie is that he still thinks he's 18 years old and heavyweight champ." He still starts his day zestfully at an early hour and ends it around midnight or later. Half-seriously, he says he can explain his success only on the grounds that he takes some three hours' less sleep than the average person: "I've been doing that for about 25 years now. That puts me 25,000 hours ahead."

As on the golf links, so through the aisles of his store Gimbel is a marathon walker, surveying counters and customers alike with sharp, appraising pride. He knows his merchandise well enough to spot a Saks Fifth Avenue evening gown at a party (and say to the wearer, "That's one of our dresses, isn't it?"). But he flatly asserts, "I'm not a great merchandiser like my father. I know the different manufacturers and what they produce. But nobody can be an expert on all the things a big department store sells nowadays. Some store heads pretend to be. They're bluffing."

For the bigtime merchant, constantly risking millions in the purchase of goods to be sold at some future date, it is more important to keep a hawklike watch on trends in public taste and general economic conditions than to be a merchandise expert. Gimbel spends most of his early-morning hours reading newspapers and magazines, with special attention to advertising, particularly that of his competitors. He gets Sunday papers from all over the country to check his out-of-town stores' advertising. "I have read more advertising," he believes, "than anybody else in the U.S." He remembers, down to specific figures, what he reads. The rest of his voluminous information about current merchandising trends he gets at firsthand by diligent, endless questioning. He is wise enough not to confine his inquiries to men of fame and fortune. He is apt to come back from his barbershop and tell his assembled store heads, as he did recently, "My barber says he's having a hard time getting along, with prices up the way they are. He's a sensible fellow; makes around $2,500 a year. If he's having trouble, a lot of other people must be too. You boys had better go home and see what you can do to help them out." To keep the common feel, Gimbel rides the subway at least once a day.

The same sane understanding of human nature shows itself in Gimbel's choice and handling of his own executives. The Gimbel art of delegating real responsibility to his subordinates reflects a carefully thought-out business philosophy. No chain-store man, Gimbel believes that the stores prosper best when each adapts itself to its own community's tastes and habits. This, he long ago concluded, could never be accomplished if local store heads acted as mere executors of orders issued arbitrarily from New York. Each store head must be an active, articulate, respected member of his community—free to express his knowledge in his business practice. To this end Gimbel encourages generous Gimbel contributions to local charities and sponsorship of such goodwill projects as the Gimbel art contests in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, and the University of “Even before our first son was born, my wife and I decided to start a ‘fund for the future.’ We put aside every dollar we can spare, and we invest these dollars regularly where they will work for us... a good part of them in long-established, dividend-paying companies whose stocks are listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

“We make our investment selections carefully, and receive a gratifying return, in the form of dividends, from them. This year, for example, our stocks are paying us better than 6%, on the average. We have profited also from increases in the market values of our securities. Our fund is growing steadily...and faster, we believe, than it would invested in any other way.”

YOU AND YOUR INCOME—Income-producing investment opportunities, available in the dividend-paying stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, are attracting the interest of people with surplus funds. Current yields and other factual information needed in evaluating securities may be obtained at offices of Member Firms of the Exchange.

Yields change as market prices and dividends change. Informed investors keep this in mind. They also bear in mind the many other factors that are continually affecting investment values.

A booklet, “Investment Facts About Common Stocks and Cash Dividends,” shows the following average cash yield on all dividend-paying stocks on the New York Stock Exchange for each year since 1940, based on year-end prices (estimate for 1949 is based on recent prices):

Pittsburgh's Graduate School of Retailing. He pays the store heads salaries-plus-bonus, ranging from $80,750 to $133,500 a year, which let them live like the leading citizens he expects them to be. Bernard Gimbel, who with his immediate family owns 20-odd percent of Gimbel stock, takes a salary of $100,000 a year but no bonus; six Gimbel executives earn more than he. Cool reasonableness rules all personal relations with his executives. "He may get a little testy when it looks as though he were going to be late to a prizefight," one former associate testifies, "but he can lose $2 million without blinking an eye."

Certain decisions, those concerning real estate, finance and other matters of major corporate policy, Gimbel reserves to himself. In addition he sometimes, but only very rarely, breaks his rule against intervening in internal store matters. One such exception occurred when he discovered that a store subexecutive was having affairs with girl employes. Overriding the store head, Gimbel stepped in and fired the guilty man. "We can't have such things," he explains, taking the practical view. "Pretty soon all the mothers in town would be forbidding their daughters to work in our store." Gimbel habitually goes out of his way like this to ascribe business decisions of this kind to practical motives rather than moral principles. He says, for example, that he never knowingly permits shoddy goods to be sold in the stores because a dissatisfied customer is a store's worst enemy; besides, it costs an average of $2 each to process customers' complaints. He says that it never pays to make a misleading statement in an advertisement because you can't get away with it. He recalls that he cautioned his subordinates against cheating on OPA prices during the war because the government was taking 80% of profits in income taxes anyway and the small additional gain to be made by cheating would not be worth the risk.

He is fond of explaining his public services in the same rough terms. In 1946 he helped avert a threatened subway strike. The next year he accepted the presidency of the New York Convention and Visitors' Bureau, which he still holds. "I'm not public-spirited," he explains. "The subway strike would have kept customers away from our stores, and the more visitors there are in New York, the more customers we'll have."

Friends incline to think that Gimbel deliberately talks the role of cynical money-grabber because he is still trying to live down his early reputation as a sport. Whatever his motive, few people accept him at his own evaluation. Last October he received public recognition of the very special place he occupies in American life when the National Conference of Christians and Jews gave him their Brotherhood Award. It tells a good deal about Bernard Gimbel that this honor came to him though he had never beat loud drums for "racial tolerance" and though, unlike some Jews, he had never loaned his name to shrill, high-powered anti-anti-Semitism campaigns. As someone who knows him well explained, "Bernie has done as much as any single man to allay racial antagonism in this country. He has done it not so much by any direct actions to that end as simply by being the kind of man he is."

In the Marxist book a man like Gimbel is inevitably an exploiter and a would-be monopolist, crushing the spirit of his employes and striving always to swallow up his competitors. But Gimbel's competitors continue to thrive and multiply. And the facts of his life make plain that were he, by some miracle on 34th Street, to wake up tomorrow and find himself boss of all the nation's stores and mail-order houses, he would shortly be the unhappiest man alive. Competition is the life of Gimbel.

AT HOME the Gimbel family circle includes son-in-law Hank Greenberg, now general manager of the Cleveland Indians baseball club. Above, the former home-run king, sitting with his wife Caral and Mrs. Gimbel, exchanges grins with his fond father-in-law, whom he still respectfully calls "Mr. Gimbel."

IN STYLE OF THE TIME RAPHAEL'S GOD CREATES EVE FROM ADAM AS THE FUTURE ADAM AND EVE WATCH WITH CAIN AND ABEL

New Raphael comes to U.S.

For centuries this glowing little painting of the Creation of Eve (shown in its actual size above) has lain in vaults and private European collections, virtually unseen by the rest of the world. Long suspected of being an early work of the great Raphael, it was never fully authenticated until it was bought recently by a Swedish woman who commissioned the celebrated authenticator, Giuseppe Fiocco, to examine it. Unquestionably, he said, it is a "jewel" of a Raphael. Hoping to sell it, the owner brought it to the U.S. The asking price: $100,000, or almost $1,000 a square inch.

ANIMAL REACTIONS

IN DARKENED ROOM ILLUMINATED ONLY AT INSTANT PICTURE WAS MADE, BAT WITH 11-INCH WINGSPREAD AVOIDS MAZE OF 12-INCH LOOPS BY SQUEAKING AS IT GOES

THEY ARE FAR MORE SPECIALIZED THAN MAN'S

A healthy man gets along very nicely with the five senses that God gave him and scarcely realizes that these senses have great limitations of their own. Thus he is very likely to assume that the creatures of the animal world all see, taste, smell, feel and hear in much the same way that he does. Actually, however, the healthiest man has nothing like the vision of an eagle, the tasting powers of a catfish, the smelling ability of a moth or, obviously, the patience of a wood tick.

Only in the last half century has man seriously tried to discover how animals, birds and insects react to the world around them. Gradually scientists have found that some creatures have developed certain of their senses to an almost unbelievable degree, though sometimes to the detriment of other senses. An eagle, for example, has a weak sense of smell but can see a small rodent half a mile away. A gypsy moth can smell the scent of its mate for more than a mile. A catfish is almost blind, but it can actually taste with its whole body. The small blind wood tick, which waits to drop from a branch onto a passing animal, times its drop by a powerful sense of smell—and it can wait for its victim, food-less, for as long as 18 years. Bulls are remarkably quick to spot motion, but even the fighting variety cannot tell red from gray. Katydid's hear with their knees, but in the field of hearing the probable champion is the bat (above). Its flight is guided almost entirely by sound: it utters continuous squeaks too high-pitched for the human ear. The sound of these squeaks bounces off objects in its path and the bat, guiding its flight by the echoes, can maneuver through the most complicated maze or darkest cave without brushing a wing. To see more experiments which test animal senses, turn the page.

SMELL

Although the dogfish shark at the right is ravenously hungry, it is passing up its favorite food, a plump squid, because its nostrils are stuffed with cotton. Its sense of smell has developed to such a degree that it largely controls the shark's whole existence. Prevented from smelling, the shark swims aimlessly and cannot find the most obvious food. When one nostril is plugged it will follow smells flowing into the unplugged nostril and will wind up swimming in circles. In many other fish the sense of smell is less developed. The pike depends largely on vibration to locate its prey—when blindfolded it will ignore motionless food nearby and strike instead at the point of a pencil moved through the water. Trout depend mainly on their vision for their food, but to a goldfish the important thing is taste.

LOOKING FOR FOOD, A SHARK WITH ITS NOSTRILS PLUGGED FAILS TO SPOT A SQUID RIGHT UNDER ITS NOSE

VISION

Most birds can barely move their eyeballs; instead they move their heads. As in the case of the pigeon (right), the head has an almost gyroscopic action which is necessary to its balance during flight. The head must stay lined up with the horizon if the bird is to fly. For this reason it is difficult for a pigeon to fly in the dark because it can see nothing with which to orient itself. Most birds have both microscopic and telescopic vision and can see close-up and faraway objects at the same time. Some can gauge depth better than others. Diving land birds must be able to swoop down on ground objects without hurting themselves. Consequently they have developed the ability to adjust focus much more rapidly than sea birds like gannets, which plummet headfirst into the water after small fish.

TRIPLE-EXPOSURE PHOTOGRAPH SHOWS PIGEON'S HEAD IN A VERTICAL POSITION REGARDLESS OF BODY ANGLE

FEELING

One of the most extreme refinements of any of the senses has developed in rattlesnakes, copperheads and water moccasins. They are known as pit vipers because of a depression or pit between the eyes. In this pit is a remarkably delicate organ which acts as a heat-detecting device. It reacts so delicately to the presence of heat that it enables the snake, even when its nostrils are stuffed and its eyes covered, to strike accurately at a moving object which can be as little as 4° warmer than the surrounding air. This experiment (right) was conducted at the Museum of Natural History in New York. A rattlesnake which could not see was placed before two swinging light bulbs, one of which was lit. Even though the bulbs were constantly interchanged, the snake hit the warm one every time.

ITS EYES COVERED WITH TAPE, RATTLESNAKE STRIKES UNERRINGLY AT WARMER OF TWO MOVING LIGHT BULBS

PAIN

A DRAGONFLY TAKES A FIRST BITE OF ITS OWN TAIL

If a dragonfly is held firmly by the wings and its tail is inserted in its mouth, the insect will bite the tail. Then, with apparent eagerness, the dragonfly will start eating its own tail and will continue to do so until the stump of the tail is out of its reach. Then, after a while, the insect will die. This is one of the many experiments that scientists have conducted to attempt to settle the age-old question of whether or not all creatures can feel pain. Such experiments indicate that the lower orders, at least, do not feel pain in anything like a human degree, probably because their brains are more primitive and because they have fewer deep nerve endings than exist in the higher orders. In certain situations some animals appear to humans to be suffering even when it is definitely known that they are not. A frog, for example, can be totally anesthetized. Yet when a small piece of acid-soaked paper is placed on its back, it will try to kick the paper off with a foot even though it could not consciously be feeling pain. And when a simple earthworm is cut in two, both halves will go their separate ways apparently undisturbed.

A FEW SECONDS LATER DRAGONFLY HAS ALREADY DEVoured TWO SEGMENTS OF ITS TAIL WITHOUT APPARENT DISCOMFORT AND IS GETTING READY TO START A THIRD

HEAVING AT ROPE, Cookie, a chimpanzee, tries to lift a heavy weight from the floor. He knows from experience that he will get a banana if he is successful.

ASKING FOR HELP, Cookie goes over to his big friend, Nero, tugs his hand and chatters into Nero's ear. Nero shows no obvious enthusiasm for Cookie's project.

INTELLECT

The animal whose reactions are most like those of a human is the anthropoid ape. It sees, hears, smells, feels and tastes much as a man does, but these senses are more important to its everyday life and hence sharper than those of man. The greatest specialization of one sense at the expense of another is found in the lowest orders and, as animals climb higher on the evolutionary scale, these wide differences tend to even out. In place of a lopsided dependence on one sense, the ape has succeeded in developing a primitive intellect. As shown by these two chimpanzees in the St. Louis Zoo, it also has an efficient if primitive method of communication and an ability to cooperate when its strength is needed on an important project.

You can't fool this Flavor Expert!

It takes more than coaxing to convince your baby something tastes good. Many doctors now say even tiny infants have a real sense of taste before they're six months old.

So, every day in the year, we at Gerber's give Baby's budding taste buds full consideration. We spend all our time making sure that first-rate fruits, vegetables, grains and meats are turned into first-rate, True-Flavor Foods. And all Gerber's are accepted by the Council on Foods and Nutrition of the American Medical Association.

How old is your flavor expert? Ready for Gerber's True-Flavor Strained Foods? Or has Baby enough teeth to enjoy Gerber's finely chopped, equally tasty Junior Foods?

Your tot's a texture expert, too. That's why all Gerber's, from Baby's very first Cereal through Junior Meats have Perfected-Texture. Doctors approve it, too. You see we make it our business to satisfy all the experts.

ON AIRING YOUR YOUNG HEIR—Daily airings help give Baby rosy cheeks, a better appetite, and better sleep.

Outdoor airings: Doctors say, even at the age of 1 month, healthy babies can go out if properly clothed and covered. Provided, it's not colder than 25 degrees F.

Indoor airings: When it's damp, raw or below 25 degrees even older babies are better off taking indoor airings by an open window. Be sure the crib or carriage isn't in a draft. And, dress Baby warmly, cap and all.

WINTER MENU TIPS

COLD WEATHER often makes Baby extra hungry. Gerber's have more good ways to satisfy that appetite than you can shake a spoon at. 3 Cereals, 21 Strained Foods, 15 Junior Foods, and 6 marvelous new Meats. All, ready to serve!

LUNCHEON SOUP FOR YOUR TODDLER AND YOU

MAXIMO MAXIM, shown at right in the garden of his villa, is San Marino's man of mystery. Listed as the head of a shipping concern in that landlocked country, this Romanian operates the republic's new gambling casino; some people say he is really Communist boss of San Marino, perhaps even of Italy.

Mysterious Maximo

His capitalist-style casino merrily supports a tiny Communist state

by WILLIAM H. ATTWOOD

SAN MARINO, only 38 square miles in area, is bounded on all sides by Italy.

THERE is only one neon sign in the Republic of San Marino. In 4-foot bluish letters it spells out the word Kursaal. Under its glow the only Communist-dominated government west of the Iron Curtain is trying to save itself and balance a lopsided budget by running a gambling casino along strictly capitalist lines. The man behind the casino is a round, bald-headed Romanian man of mystery named Maximo Maxim. Whether his motive is hard cash, as he says, or whether he is a Cominform agent, as his enemies say, this squat Balkan is bailing out the world's most unorthodox Communist regime in one of the world's most unorthodox states.

San Marino's 15,000 citizens look and speak like the 45 million Italians who surround their 38-square-mile nation on all sides. They have been running their own affairs as a sovereign state ever since the year 301, when a stonecutter named Marinus was given Mount Titano by a grateful Italian lady whose two sick sons he cured of a mysterious disease. His followers and their descendants have stayed on this 2,500-foot mountain above the Adriatic plain ever since.

The present San Marino government, under whose rule the casino was set up this year, is a coalition of Communists and left-wing Socialists known as the Committee of Liberty. It holds 35 of the 60 seats in the Grand and General Council. Of the two captain-regents, who are elected every six months, one is a Communist and one a Socialist. They head the only Communist-dominated government in Europe which has not created a secret police, nationalized industries, collectivized the land or crammed jails with political prisoners.

San Marino is also the only Communist country which you can visit without a visa. You just turn off the Adriatic coast road at Rimini and five miles farther you cross the frontier, marked only by a signpost and an empty, candy-striped sentry box. Twenty zigzag curves later you find yourself in the capital, also called San Marino—a kind of Gothic mountain penthouse (next page).

Maximo Maxim's name, I soon discovered when I visited San Marino late last summer, crops up almost every time you start a conversation. Within a few hours after my arrival I was gratuitously informed by a variety of people that he was a Communist spy, a harmless retired businessman, a political exile, the front man for several spurious shipping companies, an insurance broker, the financial angel for the Committee of Liberty, an importer of American cigarettes, a narcotics peddler and the shadowy figure behind the syndicate which last June paid the San Marinese government a 100-million lire advance for the nine-year gambling concession at the new casino. Trying to sort out rumor from fact, I looked up Luigi Zaffarani, a Socialist and former captain-regent who was recommended as a reliable source of information. Signor Zafferani, a swarthy, heavy-set man of 40, was once a dishwasher in a Brooklyn restaurant. I found him at the casino, where he is on hand every evening to make sure the government gets its percentage of the day's take.

THE ONLY POLITICAL PRISONER in San Marino is an Italian accused of Fascist activities during World War II. His prison is a medieval castle, one of three in the country, which offers scenic views probably unmatched by any other jail in the world. This photo shows how San Marino is perched on Mount Titano high above the Italian plain.

"Ah yes, Maxim," he said after I put a question to him. "Well, I don't know too much about him except that he was helpful in setting up Sitas."

"Sitas?" I repeated.

"It's the society that operates the casino. Maxim got it going with a group of Genoese bankers, and they offered us a percentage of the casino's receipts plus a substantial advance. What's more, they are building a hotel here and a new casino. Yes, I realize gambling is against our Socialist principles, but what could we do? We were in a desperate financial position last June." He shrugged. "So the Kursaal was opened last August first, and it looks as if we might balance the budget next year. Our own citizens aren't allowed to play there," he added.

The republic's money troubles, Zafferani explained, started with a British air raid on June 26, 1944, which missed its targets on Italian soil but killed 63 people and caused more than two billion lire damage on San Marino's neutral territory. The British offered only 50 million lire (about $80,000) in compensation, which did not begin to meet reconstruction costs. Then the Italians, who had been paying the republic a subsidy of 15 million lire annually in return for collecting duty on imports which arrive at Italian ports for San Marino, balked at boosting the figure after the devaluation of the lira. Nor have they rebuilt the railroad from Rimini on the Italian coast, which used to bring in a thousand tourists a day to San Marino.

"So you had to turn to Maxim," I concluded.

"We had no choice," he said. "No one else would lend us the money."

All this was confirmed to me a few hours later by Gildo Gasperoni, secretary of the local Communist party, whom I found wearing a pair of greasy overalls and working on a truck in a garage at Borgo Maggiore, the second of the republic's five towns. Gasperoni, a lithe, brown man, is minister of transportation and social welfare and apparently as patriotic a San Marinese as you could find; in fact, for a Communist he sounded much like a Titoist. "I am a San Marinese first," he told me, "and a Communist second."

"Look," he said when I asked about Maxim, "last June we owed our workers 12 million lire and we didn't have a lira in the treasury. Since the war we've maintained a big public-works program to keep everybody working, and we've instituted a complete program of social insurance. All that costs money. We had to do something."

Postage stamps, once San Marino's biggest source of foreign capital, hadn't produced enough, he said, even with two special issues beamed at American philatelists—one a Roosevelt series and the other a set commemorating the 100th anniversary of the U.S. postal system.

"No," Gasperoni continued, "we just had to take this step. Maxim promised us a quarter billion lire annually from the gambling. And the building of the hotel and new casino will give jobs to 300 workers." He smiled. "I guess Maxim's our Marshall Plan."

Next I went to see Francesco Balsimelli, the opposition leader, who teaches Latin and Greek at San Marino's only high school. When I mentioned Maxim he quickly led me into his study and presented me to a thin young lawyer named Teodoro Lonfernini. We sat down, Balsimelli facing Lonfernini and me across his desk.

"Maxim was sent here two years ago to reinforce the Communist dictatorship," he said earnestly. "His money—wherever it comes from—is being used to destroy our liberty and our morality."

"Thank God," said Lawyer Lonfernini, "that we of the Popular Alliance are here to expose him and restore liberty to our country."

No one of the Alliance—as the Christian Democratic opposition calls itself—has been threatened or molested, they admitted, but one issue of Balsimelli's newspaper, which was published at irregular intervals, was suppressed last month. It was the first instance of press censorship in COMMUNIST leader is Gildo Gasperoni, a garage mechanic.

San Marino's 1,648-year history. He fished around his desk drawer and produced a copy. The lead editorial accused the government leaders of being "traitors and infidels who have prostituted the country to evil and corruption and have caused the bones of our patron saint to tremble in his grave."

"Strong language," I commented, putting down the paper.

New discovery gives BETTER SHAVES!

Remarkable ingredient—endorsed by skin specialists—soothes the skin—helps keep it young and healthy looking

FOR YEARS daily shavers have searched for a lather cream that would accomplish two different things: one, lather readily to wash away the oily jacket surrounding each whisker and admit hair-softening water; two, contain an ingredient which would counteract the painful scraping of even the dulllest blade and leave a man's face soothed and relaxed.

But how to combine the ingredients to do both of these things has been a real problem. Until just recently, no one has known how to add a face-easing agent without cutting down the beard-softening quality of the lather.

NEW INGREDIENT 25 TIMES MORE CONCENTRATED THAN LANOLIN

Now The J. B. Williams Co., makers of Williams Shaving Cream and Aqua Velva, has discovered a method of adding an amazing substance closely resembling the natural oils of the skin directly to Williams Shaving Cream. The function of this substance is to help protect your skin against excessive dryness, daily blade scrape, yes, even hot and cold weather conditions.

Enriched by this new ingredient, Williams Shaving Cream gives you the thorough facial preparation necessary for a good shave. Williams' heavy, wet lather reduces the hardness of each wiry whisker by as much as 60%! It makes whiskers so soft they come off with the minimum of pressure on your razor.

And now—for the first time—each time you shave with the New Williams Shaving Cream, you give your face the benefit of this wonderful substance called EXTRACT OF LANOLIN, which is 25 times more concentrated than the well-known skin conditioner, Lanolin! Williams is the only shaving cream containing Extract of Lanolin!

INTRODUCTORY OFFER

Now, we don't claim miracles, but the first time you use Williams should convince you that it lathers exceptionally well. You'll see immediately that it gives a smooth, professional-looking shave. If you'll rub your hand over your face after shaving with Williams, you'll see how yielding your skin is. And the longer you use Williams, the more delighted you will be with the benefits of "Extract of Lanolin" to your skin.

If you're an executive, a salesman, a doctor, lawyer—or hold any sort of responsible position calling for a well-groomed look from morning until night . . . or if your face is sensitive to the sharp cutting edge of your razor—WE MAKE YOU THIS INTRODUCTORY OFFER:

Buy a tube of the New Williams Shaving Cream now—before you've used up your present supply. Compare this wonderful New Williams Product with any other. If Williams doesn't give you a clean shave and leave your face more soothed, more comfortable than any other shaving preparation, return the partially used tube and we'll send you two equivalent-sized tubes of any other brand! The J. B. Williams Co., Glastonbury, Conn.

251 skin specialists acclaim use of new extract

Extract of Lanolin is used extensively in treating various skin troubles by leading dermatologists. In fact, 251 skin specialists approve the New Williams Shaving Cream after trying it themselves. Here's what these doctors say about it:*

"Leaves no abrasions, no burning, gives 'soft-skin' feeling following a clean, close shave."

..... M. D., Waterbury, Conn.

"Excellent for skin; in fact, I do not know a better shaving cream."

..... M. D., Watertown, Mass.

"Williams is an excellent shaving cream. I recommend it highly to my patients."

..... M. D., Milwaukee, Wisc.

"I believe it to be a distinct advantage."

..... M. D., Boston, Mass.

"And well merited," said Lonfernini. "Do you know that in June Maxim was accused by a Romanian engineer in Switzerland—a fellow named Scanardi—of being the Cominform boss for Italy?"

As an alternative to Maxim and his Kursaal, the opposition claims that if it gets back in power the Italians will come across with a bigger annual payment subsidy and rebuild the railroad, and the British will offer more war damages. They also speak vaguely of Marshall Plan funds. Meanwhile, said Balsimelli, they scored a small triumph in October when Father Donati, the chief priest of the Church of St. Francis, refused to bless the new regents with holy water for the first time in history.

OPPOSITION leader is Francesco Balsimelli, schoolteacher.

I left Balsimelli and Lonfernini to pay a call on Gino Giacomini at his office in the quaint Gothic government palace. Signor Giacomini, the oldest socialist of San Marino, is secretary of state for foreign affairs in the government. I found him a gaunt but cheerful man in his 70s, who was not worried about the future of the republic. "The people voted for us because we gave them progressive government. As for the casino—" he made a wry face. "Well, it will balance our budget and it won't be there forever."

I could not draw him out about Maxim, so I asked him why he had not applied for American aid.

"Oh, I think our consul in America mentioned it once to your State Department," he said, "but nothing came of it." He led me out into the main hall of the building and showed me paintings of San Marino's national heroes. Among them was a bust of Abraham Lincoln. "Ah, there is a man who would have understood our predicament," said Mr. Giacomini. "He wrote us a letter in 1861, saying our republic was one of the most honored in history. We celebrate his birthday here."

"Well," I said, "it wouldn't do any harm to inquire at the ECA."

"Maybe I will," he replied as we shook hands, "when the moment is propitious. Maybe we will even apply for admission to the U.N. After all, why not?"

I left him and walked across the square and down the twisting, cobbled lanes toward the Kursaal. It was nearly dusk, and everyone was out for a stroll—the Swiss tourists, the monks, the police in their Victor Herbert comic-opera uniforms and a few special characters: three serious-looking sportsmen who were attending an international clay-pigeon shoot; the Romanian in the corduroy jacket who came for a Philatelic Congress last year and never went home; San Marino's envoy to Liechtenstein, an old gentleman who prefers to remain here rather than at his post, and Sesto Liverani, the chief of police who cannot leave the country because he is wanted in Italy on a murder charge.

SOCIALIST leader Gino Giacomini is foreign affairs secretary.

I walked into the Kursaal, past stony-faced croupiers and a mural of a leering satyr bearing down on a rosy-breasted nymph, and headed for the bar. As I was ordering a drink, a sallow-skinned man in a sport coat touched me on the elbow.

"Excuse me," he said in halting English. "You are the correspondent who has been asking about Mr. Maxim?"

*The San Marinese government has apparently changed its mind since then about joining the U.N. One explanation offered is that, if admitted, they would have to borrow money to pay the estimated assessment (about $160,000). They have applied to ECA for aid but were told that the funds allotted to Italy were supposed to take care of San Marino's needs.—ED.

I nodded.

"Mr. Maxim would like to meet you," he said.

I canceled the drink and followed the man out the door and down a darkened lane. We stopped before a low-slung villa half hidden by Acacia and Bougainvillea bushes. He rang the bell.

The man who opened the door reminded me of a sawed-off Sidney Greenstreet. From his pudgy face, bright black eyes darted first at my companion, then at me. He smiled and held out a thin, soft hand. "Maxim," he said.

I followed him into the richly furnished living room. A fire was crackling in the ancient stone fireplace, and a decanter of whisky was on the sideboard. Drinks were poured in silence, and we sat down.

"I do not ordinarily see reporters," he began. "They are always looking for scandal. But you seem to be a genuine correspondent," he continued, "so I have decided to help you with your story about San Marino."

I thanked him for the compliment and replied that I would like to know something about his activities in the republic.

"Just a poor refugee"

HE smiled. "I am just a poor refugee who is trying to stay in business," he said. "I have been a businessman all my life. At 52 I can't start anything new. I do not have the controlling interest in the casino. A group of Italian financiers have the principal interest. Mine is small." He paused. "Some people say I am an opportunist. What opportunism is there in doing business?"

I nodded and took another pull at my drink.

"Oh, I've been called another Lawrence of Arabia, another Zahrroff. But I'm just a man of little stature. It is true that I dined with important Romanian Communists like Gheorghe Gheorghiu-Dej and Maurer. But you know the Balkan mentality. If you are in business, you must deal with the people in power. What should I have done? Gone to the janitor of the foreign ministry?"

He had not been in Romania, he said, since 1947. I asked him what were his relations with the San Marino government.

"Strictly business," he replied. "The Communists didn't want the casino but it was their last chance. I was called in because of my business knowledge and my contacts. There have been charges that I financed the party in the February elections. That's nonsense. I don't go in for intrigue. I'm a businessman."

He folded his hands and looked at me slyly. "You have probably also heard that I can't leave the country. Well, it's true that since the elections the Italians have been very difficult about giving me entry permits."

I stood up and walked over to the window, wondering how to phrase my next question. Outside, the last pale sunset colors were fading on the horizon, and the old towers of San Marino were dark blurs against the night sky. Far below, lights were twinkling on the Italian plain.

Maxim joined me at the window. "You may even have heard," he said softly, "that I am an agent of the Cominform."

I turned to look at him. His beady eyes were dancing and a broad smile creased his cheeks.

"A Cominform agent?" he repeated. "My dear fellow, who has the proof?"

ROAD BUILDERS' BIGGEST YEAR

U.S. CONSTRUCTS 60,000 MILES OF HIGHWAY

This month the U.S. completes the biggest highway construction year in its history. By December's end it will have spent a record $1.7 billion or more, working to add some 60,000 miles of new or improved roads to the national network of 3.3 million miles; it will have spent $1.3 billion more for maintenance. Except for projects like New York's far-flung Thruway or Pennsylvania's Turnpike extension (picture on this page), most of the construction money has been spent improving present highways—stabilizing shoulders, easing sharp curves, adding lanes, or widening existing ones from the old standard 9 feet to the 11- to 12-foot width necessitated by modern speeds. A main reason for the record construction is that the big era of U.S. road building occurred during the '20s. Since a good concrete road surface lasts from 20 to 30 years, thousands of miles of U.S. highway are now wearing out.

To the economy-minded, who regard $1.7 billion as too much, road builders have a reasonable answer: road building is still fairly cheap. The U.S. highway network, at a conservative estimate, actually needs not $1.7 but $20 billion worth of improving. And although they have cost the nation $35 billion in all, U.S. roads annually create in auto, tire and petroleum manufacture $30 billion worth of national income.

34,271 MILES OF MAJOR ROAD BUILDING

The red dots and dashes on this map show the location of some 34,271 miles of road improvements and new road construction completed or under way on federal and state roads during 1949, as reported to LIFE by the 48 state highway departments. Since the map's scale is 133 miles to the inch the dots' size has been exaggerated for visibility; the dashes represent stretches of 10 miles or more. The table at right shows the estimated amounts spent in each state for road construction during the year. The biggest road-building job financially was done by New York, the biggest physically by Texas with 7,270 miles of construction. The map does not show local or county road construction, of which there were some 26,000 miles this year, bringing the national total to more than 60,000 miles.

THE NEW YORK THRUWAY, when it is finished, will be one of the longest, finest express highways in the world—486 miles of divided, four-to-six lane, limited-access highway stretching from just outside New York City (lower left) north to Albany, then along the historic Mohawk Valley route to Buffalo and the Pennsylvania line. It will thus follow the L-shaped area of New York state's densest population; 90% of the people and 81% of the motor vehicles lie within 30 miles of the Thruway's length. Eventually it will join with the Hutchinson River-Merritt Parkway system that runs along Long Island Sound (bottom) and with a proposed Berkshire Thruway just below Albany (right, center). Built through virgin country instead of over existing roads, it will present gradual curves, gentle hills and a minimum of 1,000 feet of "sight distance." It will be designed for a 70 mph speed limit, and there will be no traffic lights, billboards, roadside stands, intersections or rail crossings from end to end. It will by-pass towns; access to it will be by cloverleaf interchanges. The first four miles were completed this fall near Fishers (14 miles southeast of Rochester), and 10 more will be finished this winter. Financing its $400 million cost is the big obstacle to its rapid completion, but if the state votes to make it a toll road and issues bonds the Thruway could be completed by 1955.

DRILLER KUHN'S FACE GETS POWDERED WITH LIMESTONE

PENNSYLVANIA LENGTHENS ITS PIKE

The Pennsylvania Turnpike, running 160 miles from Harrisburg to near Pittsburgh, comprises more than half of the total express highway mileage in the U.S. A year ago work began on extending it eastward another 100 miles to Philadelphia, bringing it near the old Philadelphia-Lancaster Turnpike which, built of crushed stone and completed in 1795, was the first U.S. highway. Today some 20 miles of the extension are virtually completed, 70% of the earth moving is done, and it is expected the project will be opened in late 1950 after having required 2,750 man-years of work. Machinery has reduced man's pick-and-shovel work on roads but in some ways has made his work tougher. Few men can stand more than ten years of operating the big, body-shaking earth movers.

FOUNDATION for local road underpass hardens near Camp Hill. When Turnpike bisects farm as here, a $20,000 bridge is sometimes built so farmer can reach his property.

CONCRETE IS POURED for abutments on two of the 124 bridges the Turnpike extension necessitates: above, for a new mile-long bridge over the Susquehanna River; below, for a bridge that will carry the Turnpike over railroad tracks near Mechanicsburg.

MAMMOTH MACHINES SPEED WORK

One reason U.S. road builders have been able to do as much as they have this year is the remarkable improvement made during the last decade in the machinery of road building. These Paul Bunyan-esque devices have not only moved mountains but have made highways much safer, since their capacity permits leveling of dangerous hills and moderation of curves on a scale heretofore unfeasible. They include devices like dieselized carriers that speed 14 tons of excavated dirt over rough terrain at 50 mph, loaders that dig up and load three tons a minute, rock crushers that crush 150 tons of rock an hour, Treedozers that pluck out good-sized trees like radishes, and even motorized wheelbarrows.

BIGGEST DITCHING MACHINE employs a huge wheel with conveyor that automatically digs ditches from 40 to 51 inches wide up to a depth of 8½ feet.

SOVIET CAPTION: "GENTLEMEN . . . PUT YOUR HANDS DOWN! MR. AUSTIN IS ONLY SMOOTHING HIS HAIR!"

HOW THEY SPLIT PEOPLES' SIDES IN RUSSIA

Out of the Crocodile's Mouth, a book published this week in Washington by the Public Affairs Press, takes its title from Krokodil, the only consciously funny magazine in the Soviet Union. Its collection of 129 Krokodil cartoons, chosen by the book's editor, William Nelson, is a salt mine of Communist humor. In the salt mines many Soviet cartoonists grow heavy-handed trying to convince the Russian people that Americans are corrupt, that American businessmen are merchants of death, that American workers are without civil liberties. When it likes a theme Krokodil frequently hammers it (above and below) to make a propaganda point—in this case to excuse Russia's losing every major U.N. vote. Sometimes it touches real American weaknesses, such as the miserable lot of many Negroes. And sometimes its gags are unconsciously funny—as in the case of an electrician who says, "The incandescent lamp was invented by our people, Yablochkov and Lodygin" only to be squelched by another: "Yes, but the Americans invented the idea that Edison invented it."

"MECHANIZED VOTING": the two kinds of votes cast by mechanical arms are for U.S., against Russia.

"THE MAJORITY" shows United Nations delegates as a group of puppets whose hands respond to strings pulled by U.S. Delegate Warren Austin—thereby explaining why the Soviet "disarmament" proposal was rejected.

To light up his Christmas and the years to come Kaywoodie Pipes and Holders are especially appreciated as gifts. The Kaywoodie organization has furnished smoking enjoyment from 1851 to the present time. Kaywoodies are slow-cured, provide years of service. The Kaywoodie fitment has proved to be the best. Kaywoodie Company, New York and London. 630 Fifth Avenue, New York 20, N. Y. Folder on request.

KAYWOODIE COMPANION SET, $25
 The two Kaywoodies are carefully matched in grain. Greatly admired among pipe-smokers these pipes become steady companions. See them at dealers.

THE ASS PLEADS, "Take me with you, gentlemen!" "Why?" asks one of the Americans who last summer hunted for Noah's Ark on Mt. Ararat. Says the ass, "Who but an ass would believe that you are looking for the Ark?" thus inferring that anybody not born yesterday would know they must be spies.

"THE MIRACLES OF TRAINING" was Krokodil's caption for this drawing of the British lion putting his head in Uncle Sam's mouth. Moscow did not expect the British to believe they were foolhardy to accept U.S. aid, but it had to make Russians believe any nation sells its birthright to obtain Marshall aid.

ASK THE MAN FOR BALLANTINE... PURITY, BODY, FLAVOR IN EVERY GLASS... AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING ALE...

GIVE HIM America's Most Popular Electric Shaver

No beard too tough — no skin too tender.

Best for both beginners and seasoned shavers.

Shaves every type of face—full, medium or lean.

Shaves the neck clean and close.

Sunbeam SHAVEMASTER

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

ENTIRELY NEW SHAPE is smaller in the hand, easier to handle

Why Shavemaster uses ONE Twice-Size SINGLE Head instead of a multiplicity of small heads

Original Model R Shavemaster (475 openings)

Model S Shavemaster (840 openings)

NEW MODEL W Shavemaster (1,750 openings)

Multiple Heads
Sunbeam's bigger single head gives you over three times as many shaving actions per second as shavers with many smaller heads.

The ONLY electric shaver with a powerful, armature-type, self-starting REAL Motor.

Twice-as-wide shaving surface shaves twice as much beard in same time

Cleaner, Closer Shaves in LESS TIME than with soap-and-blade

It is the enthusiasm of men who are already using the new Sunbeam Shavemaster that is behind the tremendous wave of Shavemaster popularity now sweeping the nation.* If your husband, friend or relative is one of those men who thinks electric shavers take too long and won't shave a beard like his CLOSE enough—give him the new Sunbeam Shavemaster and listen to him rave when he gets a perfect shave in 3 minutes the first time. You'll give him his most exciting Christmas gift... the one he'll talk about most.

It takes the average man about 7 minutes to lather and shave with a blade. That same man will get a better shave with the new Shavemaster in 3 minutes. Even if he's got the toughest, heaviest beard, plus a tender skin, he'll shave in LESS TIME than with soap-and-blade.

In addition to saving time, Shavemaster shaves closer—more comfortably—no nicks and cuts, muss or fuss.

There's no 10-day "trial period" necessary—none of this much-talked-about "breaking in" with the new revolutionary Model "W" Sunbeam Shavemaster. Any man can find out in 3 or 4 minutes how the new Sunbeam can give a cleaner, closer shave in LESS TIME than with any other method. See it at your Sunbeam dealer's. Most dealers are prepared to let men try the new Shavemaster right in their stores.

Smart, Practical GIFT CASE

*When seven thousand dealers were asked which electric shaver was their best seller, more named the new Sunbeam Shavemaster than all other makes combined.

A FRIGHTENED BUT DETERMINED WHITE BOY AND WHITE WOMAN DIG INTO A GRAVE AT MIDNIGHT TO FIND PROOF THAT WILL SAVE A NEGRO FROM LYNCHING

Intruder in the Dust

The movies do a hard-driving and memorable job on Faulkner's story of a near-lynching in Mississippi

"It was just noon that Sunday morning when the sheriff reached the jail with Lucas Beauchamp though the whole town (the whole county too for that matter) had known since the night before that Lucas had killed a white man." Such is the beginning of William Faulkner's novel Intruder in the Dust and of the memorable movie that Director Clarence Brown has made of it for M-G-M.

Lucas hadn't really killed a white man, though it looked as if he had. He was a proud, dignified, solitary man who had no excuses to make for his black skin and never said "sir" to a white man nor stepped aside to let him pass. The whole county came flocking into the little Mississippi town where he was jailed to watch the relatives of the dead man come and burn him alive. No one would lift a finger to help Lucas but a 16-year-old white boy named Chick, who had once accepted his hospitality, and an 80-year-old white woman who simply believed in doing what was right.

Intruder was filmed almost entirely in Faulkner's home town of Oxford, Miss., whose streets and houses and surroundings provided real Southern settings and whose inhabitants provided real Southern faces and voices. No less real are the actors in the movie: Juano Hernandez as the dignified Lucas, Claude Jarman Jr. as the puzzled boy, Elizabeth Patterson as the old lady, Porter Hall as the dead man's father, Will Geer as the sheriff. Intruder is a story about the race problem, told in exciting, melodramatic terms, not with doctrinaire symbols but with specific, believable human beings. Alive and tense throughout, with its hard-driving action, its striking personalities and its issues of right and wrong clearly drawn, it is a combination of everything that Hollywood does best.

IN LUCAS BEAUCHAMP'S CABIN Chick, helped by Lucas from an icy creek, dons his now dry clothes. Lucas refuses to let Chick repay him in any way—until, months later, he is accused of murder and calls on Chick for aid.

ON HIS WAY TO THE GRAVEYARD, where Lucas has asked him to go and dig up the murdered man, Chick rides past cabins of Negroes fearful that a lynch mob is coming in the night. At cemetery he finds the grave is empty.

IN THE COUNTY JAIL where Lucas is imprisoned, the murdered man's brother comes in with can of gasoline to lead the mob in the lynching. But the old lady, left on guard while the sheriff is looking for the body, faces him down.

FAULKNER AND OXFORD HELPED

Everyone in Oxford, Miss. (pop. 5,000) knows William Faulkner. Some Oxford citizens agree with critics who call Faulkner America's greatest living novelist, others think of him as the author of "a dirty book called Sanctuary." But they all know him as a neighbor, hunter, story-teller and cotton farmer. When the M-G-M crew arrived last March to start on Intruder the whole town pitched in to help. The mayor, who is also manager of a local movie house, got a bit part in the movie, while hundreds came out for the crowd scenes. "It was just like a picnic," said one citizen. "We spent more time watching the movie or helping make it than we did at our jobs."

Faulkner helped guide the movie people around and turned up for the first press conference of his life at the film's Oxford premiere. He looked a little unkempt (right) but got through the ordeal with a bourbon highball. Of having his picture taken he said, "It's like bullets. After the first one the shock isn't so great." Of Intruder he said, "All in all I think it is a good movie."

FAULKNER WITH PIPE AND BOWL

DOWN THE STREET of the town stalks Lucas, freed after murderer has been found, the lynching mob dispersed and the town's Negroes again on the streets. Chick and lawyer (David Brian) who helped free him watch at right.

LIKE SOLDIERS IN SEARCH OF SNIPERS, THE STEALTHY HUNTERS KEEP THEIR DUCK CALLS AND SHOTGUNS "AT READY" AS THEY WADE THROUGH STUTTGART RESERVOIR

Life Goes Hunting in Stuttgart, Ark.

Millions of mallards and hundreds of hunters meet in flooded woodland and reservoirs as the season opens

IN AN ELABORATE BLIND BUILT AMONG THE PIN-OAK STUMPS, A HUNTER WAITS PATIENTLY FOR AN UNWARY DUCK TO LEAVE THE LARGE FLOCK WHEELING ABOVE

All last week the air above U.S. marshes, lakes, rice fields and reservoirs resounded with the seductive duck calls of hunters and the hollow blasts of their shotguns. The nation's approximately 54 million waterfowl were being hunted in many places, but nowhere with greater enthusiasm than in Stuttgart, Ark. The vanguard of some three million migrating mallards, southbound down the great Mississippi flyway from Canada, were attracted to Stuttgart's 25 placid reservoirs and numerous rice fields. So were hundreds of hunters who converged on the small (6,000) Arkansas town from every section of the U.S. This year 25,000 additional acres of hunting area were opened to the public to meet this growing demand. Splashing through the tree-filled reservoirs and lying in wait near elaborate blinds like the one above, LIFE Photographer Francis Miller soon discovered why Stuttgart proclaims itself the "duck capital of the world."
